Education Is Living Experience

By Dr. Cameron Fincher
Director of the Institute of Higher Education
University of Georgia

One of the more challenging ideas in education is the recent revival of interest in experimental learning. The notion has strong appeal for many educators and a host of advocates.

In its better features experiential learning is a reminder that the mere acquisition of skills and knowledge is not sufficient for an education. The development of opinions and attitudes is also essential, as well as a concern for ethical and esthetic principles. In the past educators have written of the need to instill character, to form morals and manners, and to help direct student emotions and personal feelings into socially constructive channels.

In its worst features experiential learning is a spray of jargon about non-cognitive learning and a romantic clamor for radical reform. It is an insistence that human experience be recognized as the proper subject of education and that colleges grant academic credit for experiences students gain outside the classroom. As some advocates express it, all living is a learning experience.

The arguments for experiential learning can be quite persuasive. The political science student who participates in an election campaign gains experience that is unavailable elsewhere. He sees at first hand the action of the political process, the conduct of political candidates, and the success or failure of political tactics. He learns a great deal about political values, the cynicism of campaigners, and the fickleness of voters.

Much the same can be said for the student who participates in campaigns for environmental and consumer protection. There the student sees how public issues must be shaped for public consideration. He learns the futility of direct appeal to the public's intelligence and its sense of fair play. He learns something of the formation of power blocks and the strength of vested interests. But most of all, he should learn something of the form and substance of public dialogue. He learns that what one interest group says is not what another interest group hears.

At this point the argument can overwhelm. It pleads for educational reform that would get the students out of stuffy classrooms and into the public arenas where the real problems of life are. It charges classroom instruction with irrelevance, the meaningless recitation of facts and figures, and the perpetuation of false values that are contrary to real life.

If the colleges and universities would recognize their proper function, genuine reform of higher education would take place. Since learning is not confined to the classroom, the colleges should validate or certify student learning irrespective of where that learning takes place. In brief, the student should seek his learning in the living laboratories of the world and return to the classroom for examination and academic credit.

The enthusiasm of such advocates carries them too far. Since all learning is good and since all living is learning they believe colleges should grant academic credit for such experiences as the student finds relevant to his plans and expectations in life. Not only should formal training be recognized but work experience, community service, travel, personal encounter, and social development.

There is a fallacy in all this that escapes many advocates. They have forgotten that real life situations may be too complex and too subtle for the student. By its very nature, instruction must be abstract and relatively detached from the conflicting demands of real life.

Participation in an election campaign carries no guarantee that the student will identify relevant cues, establish logical relationships, or draw warranted conclusions. The haste and confusion of the campaign may give more misinformation than knowledge, confuse expediency with intelligent action, and destroy completely the student's notions of political process.

Granting the need to make classroom learning more relevant, it does not follow that experiential learning is the solution. Recognizing that college instruction can be too abstract, too detached, and too theoretical, it does not follow that students should be thrown to their own resources.

The instructional uses of internships, independent study, and supervised work experience have been exhausted. There is indeed a need for better experiential learning that will help the student form his own values, opinions and attitudes.

But college students do not cease "living" when they enter a classroom. All of them continue to live there, and most of them continue to learn.

Advice columns abound with information on caring for your pet, household hints, home decorating, gardening, and what to watch on teevee, among others. One would think all subjects are covered, and yet how many people have I seen throw aside the daily tabloid with the heart-rending wail: "Well and good for removing my stains and all, but I can't do a thing with my Taurus!" (or Sagittarius or Cancer, etc.) This column is to fill that vacuum. It will deal with the care and feeding of each astrological sign with the sincere hope that the reader will benefit from the information herein and will thus reach a greater understanding and appreciation for each of the 12 archetypes. Whether it be lover, friend, parent, child, teacher, or student the reader finds difficult to understand, this column is aimed at demystification of the astrology signs. And finally, it is dedicated to those voices that cry in the wilderness: "I don't understand you at all!"

Thought, Inspiration & Thanks

There is a persistent myth among many students that in order to publish a newspaper of any seemingly prosaic value the creative reporter waits for a Muse to perch on his (or her, as the case may be) shoulders and whispers impelling phrases in his(her) ear. Then, in a flurry of inspiration, another masterpiece of written communication is whipped out. Of course, few articles are inspired. Most are achieved due to sweat and tears.

The summer issue of THE SENTINEL proved to be perennial challenge, not only for me, but for all those who thought out their respective articles rather than attempting to woo inspiration. Particular gratitude must be given to Dr. Hill, our administrative advisor, who had the loveable task of manning the dark-room, as well as wading through innumerable comma splices, incomplete sentences and other laudable English devices; to Danny Hill, co-editor, who was responsible in laying out this paper (without positive criticism from anybody); to Robert Towery, who attempted to capture the activity (??) on this campus through his camera lenses; to Kathy Messina, who ran around like a half-fried chicken, for acquiring some of the ads for this issue; and to Sheila Duncan, our Business Machine Engineer, who transcribed unreadable material for all the reporters who deserve equal credit and thanks for a great job.

But the success or failure of this paper lies in your hands as readers. Only by receiving your comments can THE SENTINEL be effective in shrinking the communication gap with the powers-that-be (the administration), SGA, and other campus organizations. Your ideas on new features that would enhance this paper, or problems that exist on this campus that may be rectified can also be accomplished by your participation with and contributions to this paper—KJC's official organ of communication!!!

VOX POPULI

To the Editor:

Man has been so successful in reproducing himself that not only is he plentiful on all parts of the earth, but he faces a shortage of sustenance on some. With his overpopulation, entire species have disappeared and others are rapidly losing out in the fight for space in which to propagate their own, because man is a "sacred" creature whose very hint of life must be protected. We operate on a principle of whatever is left over after man has his "necessities" will charitably be left to "God's creatures."

So many people, horrified at the thought of allowing abortion, have no qualms whatsoever about spending a "stimulating" weekend slaughtering animals just for the sheer ENJOYMENT of it.

Granted, contraception is preferable to abortion, but when man is so plentiful that other animals are squeezed out of existence, why is a potential human life so much more "sacred" than the active functioning life of a polar bear—or a timber wolf?

I am inclined to wonder if the noise we make about our special status doesn't arise more out of fear of a threat to each of us as individuals than from our pious humanitarianism. While that wolf bears no direct relationship to our existence, that embryo is going to be one of us; and if he can be snuffed out, how do we know we won't be rationalized away next?

While I don't believe this naturally follows, someone is sure to say, "They reasoned away the Jews in Germany or the gooks in Vietnam." And since I don't know how to reconcile abortion and the fear of extermination, I'm left dangling in an unfinished argument.

Some may assume I have no compassion whatsoever for my fellow man. This is not so. I only think it is high time we de-emphasize our own importance in the animal kingdom, and tried to acquire a more balanced attitude to life in general.

As an ex-member of the so-called "silent majority," I would like to point out that birth produced not only Mozarts and Picassos but also Al Capones and Adolph Hitlers.

Recapitulatingly yours,

Fresh person Lets It All Hang Out At KJC!!

By Sheila Duncan

As soon as I got out of the car it hit me. This whole thing had to be a mistake. Yesterday I was a high school senior and today I'm a college freshperson. Sounds impressive doesn't it? That was a big mistake I took in such a short time.

Every day brings about changes, but I didn't expect this much of a change. From the moment I walked into my first class, I realized that I was on my own. None of my old friends were here to back me up this time.

Do you remember your high school days? If you do, you'll also remember the pains that were taken in forging notes to admit you to class after you had laid out. Well, those are a thing of the past. Now all you have to do is walk back in the next day, ready for class again.

My next new experience was with the teachers themselves. They treat us more like an adult, who can handle responsibility, than a child. I would much rather have someone talk directly to me, than down to me. This way I don't feel so inferior around them.

Could you imagine going to a high school class only 4 days a week? It does happen—at least it does at KJC. Get to class 5 minutes early, leave 5 minutes late, and then on Friday there is no class. Ten minutes extra a day doesn't bother me too much when I think ahead to Friday.

I couldn't believe it, either, when I saw how the students here dress. Jeans, cut-offs, and halters are the norm. No one thinks twice about walking into class barefoot. I can just see a high school principal if this group was turned loose in his school. The detention list would be a mile long, just from the bare midribs! The halters and cut-offs would surely be on a 3-day suspension list!

I guess the credit for the relaxed atmosphere belongs to the students.

No one forced us to go to college. College is on a strictly voluntary basis. Whatever your reasons for being here—meeting new people, passing and preparing for a successful career—you've picked a great school that offers many promises for your tomorrow.

The sun is now in Leo (it has been since about midnight of July 23 and it will be until about dawn of August 24), which is as good a place to start as any. The sun rules Leo, and Leo rules you. (You already knew that, did you?) Actually your Leo doesn't really rule you, he or she just needs to believe that's the way it is. Which is maybe the kernel of your Leo problem. If you are a decidedly strong personality, you resist any imposed monarchy and therefore find yourself clashing with that Leo, sometimes violently. On the other hand, a retiring sort of person will often think Leo is a big Mack truck out to run everybody down. After all, every planet in the solar system revolves around the sun, and Leo is only expecting the laws of physics to be consistent—all activity should therefore revolve around the Lion. Should the world fail to revolve around Leo—well, try to imagine the sun imploding, becoming a neutron star and collapsing in on itself, and you've got a good illustration of an ignored, frustrated, disappointed Leo.

Leo has other ways besides implosion of advising you that all is not right. Just as an overcast day can completely obscure the sun, so a Leo can cloud over in sullenness. Just as a few clouds can roll across the sky to momentarily blot out the sun, so a Leo can withdraw to pout. Just as winter sun's light is dimmed and lacking warmth, so a Leo can be distant and removed! Suns do go nova sometimes, explode and wipe out everything in their section of the cosmos. I can't say with great authority that a Leo would since I've never seen a Leo go nova. However, I occasionally read the papers and know that crimes of passion occur every day. 'Nuff said.

On the other hand a happy Leo is like a perfect summer day when the sun rises early, shines down on the earth as if blessing all creatures great and small, then

In a little noticed race in Cobb County's political scene, there is a candidate that will, if elected, focus the national spotlight on Georgia. Our opportunity to gain national attention will come by electing Georgia's first woman judge in the upcoming state court race.

As there are no Republicans running, the Democratic primary will decide the race. The two Democratic candidates will be incumbent Judge Dorothy Robinson and Cobb County lawyer L. S. Cobb.

Although Judge Robinson is the incumbent, she has never been elected to an office before. She was appointed to her present position in 1972 by Governor Carter and filled the unexpired term of Judge Jim Bullard. Mrs. Robinson was the first woman to sit on a court of record in this state and she could be the first woman elected to the bench in Georgia.

As stated before, the other candidate in the race is Mr. L. S. Cobb. It will be interesting to note how Cobb Countians will react to Mr. Cobb's slogan, "L. S. Cobb is the Man for the Job." As his only opponent is a woman, this slogan could be considered chauvinistic and alienate many women voters. Tomorrow's race may reveal much about Cobb County voters.

 after a breathtaking sunset displaying all colors in the spectrum, regretfully disappearing. The sun knows well that birds sing, plants grow, and human creatures shout happily at play only because he shines. That is Leo.

What you want to know is how to encourage your Leo's radiance and avoid the gloomy scenes without losing your own identity, right? You must learn to juggle. (I am emphatically not advising dishonesty with your Leo. I give you fair warning: lying to a Leo will not work. The Lion is susceptible to flattery, yes, but when this crittur realizes the hoodwinking, Leo does indeed become a Lion, a raging beast ready to rampage. You must not make Leo feel the fool; even a pyromaniac will avoid such fireworks.) Your loyalty is very important to this sign. Now, if your Leo comes up with an idea that is utterly stupid, you do not have to swallow it for fear of offending, nor do you have to offer the information that it's the most absurd idea conceived since the dawn of time. Use tact. Soften your rejection with a caress, like: "Moving the waterbed into the kitchen to be closer to the refrigerator is such a creative idea. You innovative mind is one of the things I like best about you, dear. Let's wait until the weekend to do it." And then you go into action quickly. Quietly put an ice chest beside the bed and stock it with Leo's favorite foods and hope this suffices. (Truthfully, I haven't been an unqualified success at dealing with Leos. I can tell you what not to do, but you must experiment yourself, and best of luck. And no, I won't tell you what my sign is.)

Leo is vain in general and vain in particular so it shouldn't be that difficult to appeal to this one's good side. The areas that King of the Jungle is proud of in particular include: the brilliantly creative mind inside that proud head; the mane of hair on top of that wonderful head; the rest of the body that the head sits on; benevolent generosity; the unquestioned authority that Leo believes he or she is; the excellent taste that only royalty is born with.

Leo is King of the Jungle, be your Leo man or woman. Like the king in charge of his subjects, Leo needs always to feel in charge. The father-figure, the advice-giver, the great protector of those beneath the royal figure, Leo may often irritate you with this paternalism. Yes, Leo women, too. Leo women cannot be described maternalistic (that's Cancer) because they do not hold to, cling to, smother, coddle, nourish, or hover over their loved ones in a motherly way. Rather they are fatherly: they do more head-patting than kissing, more lecturing than scolding, and like a father handing out the weekly allowance, they hand out love matter-of-factly (never cajoling, never pleading) and expect love and respect in return. Which is why Leo women so often make the most charming and interesting mothers. They'd much rather pitch the softball all afternoon than slave in a hot kitchen making cookies, especially since the bakery provides lovely substitutes for mother's home-baked. Lest you think she saves her paternalism for children, let me assure you that a little 100 lb. Lioness can make a 200 lb. man who has forgotten to open the door for her blush like a naughty little boy caught in the act. Not with a sharp tongue, but with a reproving look and a little pitying smile that says, "Your lack of royal blood is showing, dear, please try harder." Regardless of her station in life the Lioness is always a little bit more aristocratic than those around her. She can live in a shack on the wrong side of the tracks all her life and even her own mother will sometimes suspect that she was born a princess, kidnapped as a baby, and dropped off at the city hospital nursery. No other woman can lend such dignity to her surroundings nor wear rags as if they were ermine-trimmed robes.

The Leo's authority should be generally left unchallenged. The Lion really believes he or she is the center connection through which all lines of communication must pass. If, for example, you wish to give a big party, do consult your local Leo. The Sun King will enthusiastically produce a list of who you can contact to make your effort a roaring success, the list including the phone number of the best rock band's manager, the very best caterer in the area, who to call for discounts on drink by the case, and quite a few names of the most interesting, witty, and glamorous people you've ever met. Because Leo has the reputation (especially with him or herself) for knowing the most important people around. The Lion believes that he is the best authority on most everything. And occasionally, he really is.

Do keep in mind, however, that the caterer your Leo recommends is not the cheapest in town. More than likely, that highly recommended master of foods is the most expensive. Leos are not cheap, and they expect you not to be cheap, either. Money itself means very little to Leo so you'll probably never catch this king counting out his money. All money is created to be spent, so the Lion philosophy goes, and you can be sure the royal creature will spend it. I am sure that nobody gets as much pleasure out of money as a Leo, which means, too, that he enjoys making money. You can understand why many Leos are raging successes in business; it isn't pure ambition or desire for power that drives them, it's the joy of spending money. Perhaps you begin to see that among all the Lion's virtues, thrift is not included. Most Leos live beyond their means. Their wallet contains ample credit cards, their mailbox contains pounds of bills on the first of the month. They spend as much money as they make and more and just can't save. And why not? To a Leo, it's all very well for the commoner to be satisfied with whatever he can afford, but after all, a king must surround himself with finer things. Else what's the good of being a king?

Besides, Leo likes to indulge his good taste, so you can be sure the finer things surrounding the crown are just right. It's only fitting that a king's castle be worthy of his royal presence. There're the regal robes hanging in the closet to adorn the majestic presence; there's the expensive quadrophonic equipment for the ultimate in sound for the royal ears; there're the tasteful furnishings to surround the regal presence; there's the shiny car parked outside to ferry the kingly body about. If your Leo hasn't got all these things (or more), you may be sure that it's in the works.

I can assure you that conflicts abound with you and your Leo if you are so attached to your grubby clothes that you wear

Many people wonder why we use the word "love" in tennis instead of nil or naught. Tennis was imported from France more than 600 years ago, when zero was shown by a circle drawn on the scoreboard. In sporting slang this was referred to as "loef," the egg, which the English, who have a great flair to massacre any language, translated phonetically as "love."

 them everywhere. Leo might even nag about your appearance to the extent that you think Leo is interested only in how you look, not what kind of person you are. That's not true, actually, it's just that your ragged jeans and sweatshirt do detract from the royal presence and Leo is genuinely uncomfortable.

Leo's generosity is proverbial. Give you the shirt right off their back—and tell you to keep it. (Lucky you, it's more than likely beautiful and expensive!) A Leo will lend money and forget all about it, then be genuinely surprised when you pay the loan back. A down on his luck Leo I know was out of work, a month behind on his rent, and no definite prospects in sight. With his last $5 he took me out for hamburgers and beer and cheerfully talked about what he would buy when he got a job. A thriftier soul would have invested in a big jar of peanut butter with part of that fiver and worried. My Leo friend? Never! He'd rather not eat tomorrow and spend that money now as if he hadn't a care in the world. But because of his pride, his belief that he's always in charge, he finds it difficult to ask for a loan himself.

The way Leo spends it, you might think that was one person who never lacked for money. Wrong. A Leo's fortunes often change. Today that Leo man may take you to the most expensive restaurant in town (wearing his $200 suit, of course), then tomorrow he may skip eating altogether because he's flat broke and jobless. He is still wearing his $200 suit, however, and you can look at his beaming smile and feel as confident as he does that he'll be back in the green soon. Well, look at it from the personnel director's point of view: this fellow is so successful looking, so well-dressed and self-assured that it's evident he doesn't need a job for just money, he really wants to work at this company. Of course he'd be an asset.

Rare is the Leo who lacks a lovely head of hair. Usually thick, often wavy or downright curly, Leos are given to characteristic gestures involving their hair. Even the occasional Leo whose hair is not particularly attractive will spend time (and probably money) trying to improve and arrange the mane. Recently I worked for a small Leo man with black wavy hair worn greaser style - most assuredly not a very attractive head, I thought. But he constantly fiddled with his hair in some way, and I became aware that I could gauge his temper by what kind of fiddling he did. When he was annoyed he raked his fingers through his hair. When he was on the point of exploding with anger, he tossed his head hard enough to displace a few oiled strands, then smoothed them in place. When trying to come to a decision he absently ran the fingers of both hands over his temples. And when amused he patted the back of his head. Try studying the Leo of your choice to see how many nervous gestures involve his or her hair. Bet you'll be surprised.

Leo is not that well organized, so do not make the mistake of expecting yours to attend to details. The Lion is a grand dreamer, expert at creating entire new worlds, constructing fantasies, inventing grand ideas. Someone else will have to come along and translate these creations into reality; Leo wants and needs this because by the age of accountability, most of them realize their dreams will never come into reality without some help. In short, Leo lacks practicality and has little understanding of day-to-day reality. A down-to-earth companion or assistant is what Leo needs, and that person should possess great patience and tact as well so that the creations are not discouraged: A Leo who has been told too many times "That's impossible!" is a sad sight. Ever see a soaking wet kitten? That a totally demoralized Leo.

It's true that Leos who live alone are often scandalous housekeepers. The Leo man who lives with a woman depends on her to keep order, even when firmly committed to equalization of roles between the sexes. The woman whose man expects neatness from her will have to (1) at least help, (2) be resigned to clothes tossed over chairs, or (3) even if she's making a big effort, expect her closet, drawers, and purse to be chaos. Leo is much too occupied with important things to worry about details. Maybe a Leo was the first to say, "Don't sweat the small stuff."

Because of everything Leo is, there are some problems in the care and feeding of these creatures. Because Leo appreciates good living generally, it follows that food will be part of the good living.

Overindulging is a common failing of this sign, and the quality of the food must be watched as well as the quantity. Even if a Leo is so successful that caviar and champagne at every meal is financially possible, someone must prevent such an excess. Rich and highly refined foods will have the greatest appeal, but they will also cause high blood pressure, heavy cholesterol, bad digestion, and ultimately early death. Leo must eat plainer foods as well: vegetables, fruits, salads, milk, eggs. Even though good nutrition may not be as exciting as steak and cream puffs, this is one time you must not allow yourself to be swayed by that Leo charm. Be firm.

I know it's no bed of roses getting along with a Leo (though you don't have to say that to yours). Yet try to imagine a world without sunshine— isn't that what it would be like without a Leo in your life?

Counselor's Corner

Have you ever felt the need to talk to someone about some difficulty or hangup but never thought there was anyone who would listen or care?

Are you confused about school, wondering why you're here, and where you're going? Do you have difficulty relating socially to those around you? Are there things on your mind that you just don't want to talk to family and friends about?

On the second floor of the Humanities Building, Room 216, there is a qualified group of dedicated counselors who are interested in helping people. The professional staff of the Counseling & Placement Office consists of the Director, Dr. Leonard H. Goodman, and three full-time counselors, Inez Morgan, Diane White and Frank Wilson.

Dr. Goodman commented: "We don't give advice but rather we work with people to help them realize their own strengths and to give them responsibility for their own lives."

Dr. Goodman suggests that a major concern of several students is their ability to communicate their relationship with their parents. "It is a question of how the student can go about learning to relate to his/her folks in terms of a young adult instead of a child."

Miss White suggested that another common problem among young people is the difficulty in deciding what to major in, or what career options may be open. Vocational counseling is available and helps students to determine what kind of status he wants, and what his individual needs are.

These factors are important considerations which are necessary prior to actually deciding upon a vocation. According to Miss White, "People need to become clearer about their own need structure in order to be happy."

The Counseling and Placement Office's summer hours are: daily from 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. and Tuesday through Thursday evenings until 6:00 p.m.

Cheap Thrills

By S. T. Kid

Summer quarter students have thus far sat on their ubiquitous posteriors in the high hope something extravagantly exciting will occur on this campus. Winter quarter made way for passing fanny's that went streaking by, and Spring quarter featured fun in the sun with KJC Day. With the seething heat we have been faced with during this quarter and the lackluster days spent in the Animal Farm a certain amount of jovial activity is necessarily desired.

The SGA seems to be afflicted with the summer malady and haven't done a snoot full of work. So it isn't possible to criticize them as being indolent or diligent in their activity. The ludicrous student activity fee of $10.00 is certainly no laughing matter and we would all like to see what benefits may be reaped from this outrageous plucking.

The new SGA's performance to date is lackadaisical and if it is any indication of what is to be experienced for the coming year the students of this campus have a lot to worry about. However, as a staunch supporter of this fine organization, I am certain the SGA will somehow prove what a bunch of zealots they are, particularly with respect to the wise spending of our money. Donny, you should be forewarned that the intelligentsia who roam the hallways and pathways of this campus do not as a consequence have patient characters. So get your posterior moving. Like chop-chop, pronto!

In other non-happenings, this newspaper (if you can call it that) has finally got together a few sapheads who apparently are in the opinion they can propagate a publication of some intellectual value. One of the major problems facing them seems to be the manipulating of the door-lock so they can get into their "Bull Pen" without using the non-existing key.

Relying on some sort of newsworthy activity to occur at KJC the staff has been wracking their vacuous brains. There's really nothing to worry about, though. Either this issue will be an astounding success or a lamentable flop. If it is successful, there's nothing to worry about. But if it is a "blah-type" of work, there are two things to worry about. Either it will get better or it will get worse. If it gets worse there's nothing to get overly ecstatic about. But if it turns out to be overwhelmingly applaudable, we will be so damn busy congratulating ourselves we won't have time to worry!

HELP!!!

Will someone please step up and help the Atlanta Braves? The Braves need help in the batting department. An experienced hitter and a player able to drive in runs is required, like pronto. The pay is good and there is a bonus if Atlanta wins the pennant.

This is the type of ad the Braves need to run in the newspapers across the country, because their hitters haven't been doing their jobs lately. The Braves don't have anyone else close to the current homerun leader or anyone close to the current leader in R.B.I.'s. The pitchers are the ones who are doing their jobs. The Braves' pitchers have the lowest team E.R.A. in the National League. This speaks very highly for the pitchers but their hitting has not come through for them. The Braves have lost countless one-run games. But a change in manager might help if he keeps the team fired-up. Let's go Clyde King! Get 'em fired up and let's win the Western Division!!!

IS THIS THE YEAR OF THE FALCON?

Will this be the year for the Atlanta Falcons? Can the Dutchman finally put it all together? They should be more experienced this year and be able to work together to get into the play-offs this year. This could be the Falcons last year at a chance to win the Super Bowl for a while, because the WFL could take its toll on the Falcon's and other NFL teams. With Bob Lee back for his second year with the "birds" he should be more prepared for the season. I will make an early prediction on the birds winning and I think they will make it to the play-offs. But if the player's strike isn't over soon the birds may not have a chance.
