Professor nominated for Faculty of the Year

2005 National Faculty of the Year nominations announced

Ashley Williams Staff Writer

The National Society of Collegiate Scholars recently announced the 2005 National Faculty of the Year nominations. Among the candidates was KSU's Dr. Heather Hermanson from the Accounting Department.

"I feel honored to be nominated. There are so many great teachers at KSU," Hermanson said.

Hermanson has been at KSU since the Fall of 1993. She came here with her husband, Dana Hermanson, after they completed the Ph.D. program at the University of Wisconsin. Both were looking for teaching positions in the South, and KSU was one of the only universities that could offer two positions in accounting.

Hermanson attributes her academic inspirations to Gary Smith, the director of the marching band at Illinois.

"If there was a day that he wasn't excited to be at work, I never saw it. He loved working with students, and he expected great achievement from us through hard work and discipline," Hermanson Hermanson also said her parents inspired her and they taught her the value of education and what hard work can do. Her father was a CPA, which played a role in her decision to pursue accounting. He also taught her the importance of integrity and honesty.

Hermanson earned a degree in accounting from the University of Illinois, and moved to Atlanta to pursue a career in public account-

The winner of the NSCS Faculty of the year award will receive a $1000 stipend, and a donation of $5000 will be made to the general scholarship fund at that professor's university. The recipient will be formally announced at the National Leadership Summit in July 2005 in Denver, Colorado. A jury of professionals and students are reviewing the nominations.

"We recognize that behind each exceptional scholar stands at least one extraordinary educator," said Steve Loflin, the Executive Director and Founder. "Our goal is to provide the students a forum in which to thank them."

The NSCS is the nation's only student oriented faculty recognition program. Membership is extended to first and second year students. The NSCS helps members with career objectives and provides students access to scholarships, benefits and leadership opportunities, along with giving them access to a large network of alumni and other students. Membership is by invitation only, and based on the students GPA. There are 205 college chapters across the nation.

ISA'S 2005 MISS UNIVERSE PAGEANT

Miss Universe contestants anxiously await the judges decision.

Miss Universe crowned at KSU

Ghana's Aba Wilson crowned the 2005 ISA Miss Universe

Jennifer Garrett Staff Writer

The International Student Association hosted their 11th annual Miss Universe pageant at KSU on Friday, April 1.

The winner, Aba Wilson, became an ambassador for KSU and received a $500 scholarship.

"Miss Universe acts as an ambassador to the institution by encouraging tolerance and acceptance of people from different backgrounds," said ISA President Freddy Akpaka Kalu.

Five regions were represented by the six contestants in the event. Pearl Zhu and Maggie Liang Ji represented China, Alexandra Zayaz represented Puerto Rico, Wilson represented Ghana, Latora Barrow represented the United States and Kaori Igeta represented Japan.

The evening opened with a welcome speech from Kalu. Andrew Thomas joined the show as the master of ceremonies.

The judges included Jelka Weibe, Assistant Textbook Buyer, Dr. Jerry Mwagbe, English professor and Charmayne Richardson, Coordinator of International Student Retention Services/ISA Advisor.

Each contestant modeled native, casual and evening wear and performed in the talent portion of the competition: singing, dancing and traditional Chinese calligraphy writing. Each contestant answered various questions to highlight their intellectual and speaking abilities.

When announced as the winner, Wilson began crying and explained to the audience, "I have wanted to be in beauty pageants my whole life and I almost lost hope."

In the past, the Miss Universe pageant was run in conjunction with ISA's International Festival Week. This year, ISA decided to hold the pageant a week earlier to have more time to prepare. International Festival Week will be held April 11-17.

The ISA began in 1994 and held the first Miss Universe pageant that same year. ISA and the Miss Universe pageant were founded on the principles of bringing people from different backgrounds together.

"ISA is devoted to creating awareness of global issues, diversity on campus and social harmony," Kalu said.

The New York Times: The importance of objective reporting

Colleen Wells Features Editor

New York Times White House Correspondent Elisabeth Bumillervisited KSU April 6 and spoke about the important integrated role of media in democracy.

White As House Correspondent, Bumiller attends White House briefings and travels with President Bush to various functions.

"It is a difficult job that people sometimes misunderstand. I think many people see the White House briefings on television and think that my job is to go to listen and write down what they say on paper. That is only a small part of my job. I have to try and find out what is really going on," Bumiller said.

Bumiller's uncle was also a White House Correspondent for the Associated Press, from the Kennedy administration through the Carter administration.

"My uncle, Frank Cormier, was the Dean of White House Correspondents. He would always ask the first question, then stand up and say 'Thank you Mr. President' to signify that the press conference was over." she said. "He was a great role model for me."

"I love talking, Bumiller meeting and interviewing people," she said.

Elisabeth

After high school, Bumiller attended the Medill School of Journalism at Northwestern University, where she received her bachelor's degree in 1977. She then obtained her master's degree in journalism from Columbia University, in 1979.

After graduating, Bumiller began working for The Washington Post as a reporter for the style section.

"I started out as the party reporter. I would go out four to five nights a week and cover political parties that were considered extensions of the working day in Washington," she said. "They were sort of high risk stories that were supposedly irreverent but had news in them."

During a Jimmy Carter fundraiser Bumiller

covering in 1979, she met Steve Wiseman, who was a White House Correspondent at the time. Wiseman and Bumiller were married, and traveled to India in 1985, when he was promoted to the New Delhi Bureau Chief for The New York Times.

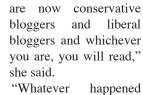

Bumiller continued to write for The Washington Post, and also began research for a book published in 1990, titled "May You Be the Mother of A Hundred Sons: A Journey Among the Women of India."

Bumiller was then transferred to Tokyo, where she began writing "The Secrets of Mariko: A Year in the Life of a Japanese Woman and Her Family," published in 1995. More recently, Bumiller aided in writing "For Women Only: A Revolutionary Guide to Overcoming Sexual Dysfunction and Reclaiming your Sex Life," which was published in 2001.

Prior to becoming a White House Correspondent in 2001, Bumiller was a reporter for the Metropolitan staff from 1995 to 1999, and then took the position as The New York Times' City Hall Bureau Chief.

Bumiller says she believes in the importance of the media's role in presenting balanced news.

"Fairness and objectivity is falling to the wayside. There to reporting the truth? Objective reporting is a work in progress, but it is important to strive for that. We get hits from the left and right for our reporting, and sometimes, it's for the exact same sentence."

Bumiller believes journalists are often criticized by people who are ideological to the point that it is difficult for them to imagine others as not being so one-sided.

"I feel that most reporters aren't ideological. If there is any bias, it is towards conflict. We like problems because they make for a good story," she said.

Despite the intense competition, long hours and constant pressure, Bumiller enjoys investigating and reporting events that shape the country's democracy.

"The best part of my job is being there with a front row seat in American history," she said. "I look at history differently now."

Dance minor available in the fall

Olivia Noland Sr. Staff Writer

KSU will offer a dance minor through the department of Theater and Performance Studies starting Fall 2005.

The new minor will include classes in ballet, modern, jazz, musical theatre dance, tap and a variety of ethnic forms, as well as courses in dance history, cho-

Is the KSU Debit Card convenient?

Choose your refund option

Olivia Noland Sr. Staff Writer

A growing concern among students is the necessity of their KSU Debit Card and whether activating it makes their electronic transactions with the university easier.

Every student is issued a KSU Debit Card upon registration for his or her classes - a policy implemented in February 2004. Students must activate this card online at www.KSUOne.com in order to choose the method in which they receive refunds from the university.

Refunds include tuition reimbursement, textbook refunds and financial aid. A misconception about the KSU Debit Card is that once activated, a student must open a checking account with Higher One, called a OneAccount.

A bolded message reads on the KSU Financial Aid web site states that, "You are not required to open a OneAccount and we have not opened one for you."

The purpose of the card is for a student to choose one of three options of a re-

Easy Refund, is most recommended by KSU, because it takes one day or less for money to be placed in a student's OneAccount. The second option is for in opening the OneAccount, money to be sent to a personal bank account of the students and takes three or more business days to complete. Students need to fill out a form for this option. The third option is a paper check that is sent by mail and can take five or more business days.

Vice President Student Government Robert Connelly said, "The con-

The first refund choice, ing is that the Higher One card has made it more difficult for students to obtain their refunds from financial aid."

> If a student is interested a free checking account, the KSU Debit Card can be used to make debit purchases at any of the 31 million merchants that accept MasterCard Debit, according to a brochure about the OneAccount. However, students do not have to open a checking account to use the debit card portion every-

the money that is due will be held until a choice is made.

"Higher One [is] supposed to streamline the refund process and move students forward into the electronic age, but it seems that so far all it has caused is students to go through a major inconvenience in order to get their refunds," Connelly said.

The Card Services desk offers information for students who may have questions about the KSU Debit Card. They are located on the second floor in the Student Center.

CORRECTIONS

The April 6 story, "Same job, higher pay" contained an error. The story stated that administrators in the Business School received the greatest increases in salary. This is incorrect. No one in the Business School [the Business College] received any reclassification or salary adjustment in 2004.

The majority of reclassifications and salary adjustments in 2004 went to staff and administrators in Business Services, under Vice President for Business & Finance Earle Holley. KSU Business Services received 17 reclassifications.

The Sentinel regrets this error. It is the policy of this newspaper to correct all errors of fact.

of studies and opportunities that KSU has to offer," Pulinkala said.

Pulinkala's roots are grounded in the arts. He was exposed to theater and music by his father, who is a musical theatre director and the founding member of Delhi Music Theatre in New Delhi, India.

He moved to California in 1998 to further his studies in modern dance and theater and was then led to New York by the work of Paul Taylor, a famous choreographer.

As the dance minor develops, Pulinkala plans to start a pre-professional level student performance company. This company will not only perform on the KSU campus but tour regionally and nationally performing and bringing dance to the community.

Dr. John Gentile, Professor and Chair of the Department of Theatre and Performance

Studies, believes that the new dance minor will bring even greater interest in the arts to KSU.

"Dance is now coming into its own at the university. I would love to see it grow to a point to where it is equal to our programs in music, theatre and the visual arts," Gentile said. "It has the potential to mature into its own department in the College of the Arts."

"We have a lot of student interest and I am really excited that the dance minor will be starting so soon," said Emilie Helms, Administrative Secretary of Theater and Performance Studies. "I get daily calls about interest in the program."

Contact Professor Ivan Pulinkala, Department of Theatre and Performance Studies at 770-499-3123 for more information, or check the upcoming Fall 2005 Course Catalog for a schedule of dance classes offered.

Student Government Election Special Section

INCUMBENT PRESIDENT Munzir Naqvi
Political science, junior

What is your biggest contribution to the students?

The biggest contribution is the fact that we voted in a Student Fees committee. We assisted in the move to Division I, which enhanced the image of KSU in the NCAA community. It also improved the value of the degrees. If it was not for the Student Fees committee, the move from Division II to Division I athletics would have been delayed.

What are your plans for the future?

My plans for the future include getting more students involved in SG. I would like to lobby the Board of Regents for more funding for KSU, which will help improve programs and bring quality faculty. We will also work to represent students in all committees and help students be heard on issues such as HigherOne. Most importantly, communicate with the students more.

What did you learn as a member of SG?

Wisdom and politics. I learned what to do, and what not to do. I also learned the political process and learned that hard work pays off and nothing good comes easy. I also learned what KSU is all about and how much the administration cares about the students.

If you could accomplish one thing in this position, what would you want it to be?

Help get football to KSU in anyway possible. This can only be done with a united student body. This will enhance campus life and be a large addition to campus life. Students want football, and from the profit we gain we will fund the academics programs and improve campus life.

Information systems, senior

What biggest your contribution to the students?

I played a role in the statewide petition drive on campus to stop a mid-year tuition increase and I lead the KSU delegation for the rally on the State Capitol steps. I helped with the push to bring Division I Athletics to KSU through my position on the Student Fees committee and SG.

What are your plans for the future?

After graduation, I plan to begin my career in Information Technology. After a few years, I plan to go back to school to obtain a degree in computer law. Eventually, I would like to get involved in politics on the state level and then my ultimate political goal is to be a representative for the United States Congress.

What did you learn as a member of SG?

I learned that hard work, honesty, integrity and a passion for making KSU a better place does pay off.

lf you could accomplish one thing in this position, what would you want it to be?

One thing I would love to accomplish is to work with the administration to bring Division I football to KSU.

The person behind the 2005 election

A brief moment with election chair Kenyon Moore

Sr. Staff Writer Kim Everhart Assistant News Editor

Alex Danaila

Kenyon Moore was appointed in the position of the Elections Chair earlier this semester and has been working to ensure that the election process will be smooth.

Sentinel: What is your role as the elections chair?

Kenyon Moore: My role is to form an elections committee and to facilitate the student government elections from start to finish, meaning working closely with the advisor to come up with campaign rules, voting schedule, applications, application deadlines, getting the voting booths, creating the ballots, everything a real election involves. Kathy Alday has been great, as well as my stellar elections committee, I couldn't imagine doing all of this without their hard work and dedication.

Design by Nick Mracek

Sentinel: Do you feel the elections will be successful?

Moore: I do, as I matter of fact I feel they are already successful. We have a lot more interest in Student Government than in any other past years, and I think it is phenomenal. We have 12 executive candidates and about 30 people running for senate positions which is very unusual.

Sentinel: What will you be doing between now and the election for the candidates, preparation for the elections, etc?

Moore: Primarily just monitoring the candidates, hearing campaign grievances. Also, voting has the potential to be online so I am working on that. And last but definitely not least - not forgetting to pick of the voting booths from Cobb Elections office.

Sentinel: How many voters turned out for last year's election?

Election coverage compiled by Kim Everhart, Alex Danaila and Melissa Spielholz.

Moore: I believe it was around 750, I would love to blow that number out of the water.

Sentinel: Do you believe your role(s) in SG will benefit you after graduation?

Moore: Most certainly. Student Government is a wonderful leadership opportunity and I encourage everyone to get involved in some form or another. I have learned so much and developed numerous leadership skills. Working with Student Government as Secretary of AA, I have met people like Dr. Black, Kathy Alday who helped me better myself and become a student leader who is ready to face anything. Former advisor Brian Wooten and Dr. King have also been encouraging and are great role models and individuals. Our whole student life is great, our whole administration is great, and Student Government helped me branch out into other leadership programs like Center for Student leadership and Presidential

A less than stellar performance

Jason Nimer Sr. Staff Writer

Gainesville, Fla. natives Less Than Jake came roaring back to Atlanta's Masquerade on April 1. They were a little older with a few more songs in their repertoire, but still played with all the talent they had five years ago.

This time around, the band was touring to support their semi-excellent "B Is For B-Sides" album. The band, for some strange reason, neglected to play but one or two songs from their new CD. Instead, they stuck to more of their older, and sometimes more obscure, material. The show was okay, but probably not the best they ever played.

The night got off to a disappointing start with two relatively unknown bands and the sometimes wonderful Allister. The first two openers were obviously out of place. Their pop sounds and basic song structure seemed slightly odd at a punk rock show.

Both of these bands really attempted to pull the crowd together, but most in attendance could be seen chatting with friends or sitting on the floor. One ended up just feeling sorry for these two slightly talented, but woefully miscast bands. Allister was up third. Though their first CD "Dead Ends And Girlfriends" was excellent pop punk fun, their subsequent releases have fallen short.

Unfortunately, the band decided to almost exclusively play their new material. The one old song they did play, "Moper," drove the crowd nuts. The band really should have taken this as cue and rocked out with some of their fan's old favorites, but alas, the new and boring songs continued until the end of their 45-minute set.

By the time Less Than Jake took the stage about an hour later, the crowd was extremely lethargic. The band really had their work cut out for them, and they almost pulled it off. Though the songs they did play really pumped up the bored crowd, any true Less Than Jake fan must have noticed they neglected to play two of their best songs, "Al's War" and "Automatic." These two omissions really soured the performance, but their renditions of "Escape From The A-Bomb House" and "National Anthem" were among two of the best live performances I have ever seen.

When it came right down to it, the show's disappointing openers and Less Than Jake's glaring miscalculation in leaving out fan's favorite songs ruined the experience. That is not to say it was not a great time, but I have seen Less Than Jake do a much a better set on several occasions in the past.

Despite not playing some of their hit songs, Less than Jake delivered a fun-filled performance.

Q: What's your favorite Less Than Jake song?

A: I can't choose [sic]. We have about 150 songs; its like having 150 children, They're all great kids but you can't pick a favorite. Certain have better attributes than oth-

Q: When did you pick up your first instrument?

A: I took piano lessons when I was 10. My dad was a musician. I was 18 when I started playing guitar. That's when I really starting pursuing music.

Q: When did you all meet?

A: I've known the drummer since I was in high school. Then I moved to the University of Florida, and about a year later we formed the band.

Q: What is the group dynamic like and has it changed over the years?

A: The four core members have stayed together. We all still have fun. It's like any other friendship, it's a love/ hate relationship..

Q: A lot of your songs are about packing up and moving on, where do those songs stem from?

A: You'd have to ask out drummer that question; he writes about 98 percent of the lyrics. They're all his life experiences and such.

Q: Why are you called Less Than Jake?

A: Our drummer's parents had an English bulldog named Jake that they treated better than anybody else.

Q: Where are you planning to go with the band in your next albums?

A: We keep evolving and doing different things. We try to shake it up a little bit. We write songs and put them out there and if people become fans then so be it.

Experience the Celtic culture

This travel column needs a mascot, and who better to be that mascot than my trusty travel companion, Bryson the Gnome? Bryson was born the day I picked him up at a Cracker Barrel. I know what you're thinking: he looks a lot like that Travelocity Gnome. Well, he's nothing like him.

Bryson is not paid, and he is a heavy drinker. You can find him hanging on Guinness glasses at local pubs. I have indeed spoken to him about this problem, but he doesn't listen; he just stares at me with that look in his eyes and smokes his flower pipe.

Anything Celtic or Irish usually catches my eye, and this is no exception. You should come out to the annual Atlanta Celtic Festival, held Saturday, May 21st from 10 a.m. until midnight at Meehan's Public House, Alpharetta, Georgia. Admissions are $10 for adults, $5 for chil-

MOVIE REVIEW: SAHARA

Oasis in the desert

Features Editor

Clive Cussler's epic novel comes to life with action, suspense and laughter in "Sahara." Matthew McConaughey ["How To Lose A Guy In 10 Days"] stars as Dirk Pitt, the witty, adventurous, former Navy SEAL who embarks on a journey through West Africa with his lifelong friend and comic relief Al [Steve Zahn, "Joy Ride"] in search of a lost Civil War battleship. The ship was thought to have never sailed through the region, however evidence of a priceless coin that was believed to be on the ship had been found in Africa.

Through a heroic act, Pitt rescues World Health Organization doctor Eva Rojas [Penelope Cruz, "Gothika"] from being murdered in the desert by men trying to stop her from discovering the cause of a mysterious disease, which will soon become an epidemic. Pitt and Rojas have different reasons for being there, but coincidentally they are both searching for the same source. The ship, which is bursource of the deadly toxins being dispersed in the river. If the toxins continue to be released at high levels, they will spread contamination into the Atlantic, killing everything in contact. The suspense swells as the group encounters > danger in their quest to stop the toxins from spreading. With bravery and gusto, Pitt tears about the Saharan desert with Al, who provides the comical entertainment.

> "Sahara" is packed with excitement and humor, which distracts from the unbelievable plot and improbable circumstances. For example, as seen in many of the trailer clips, Pitt attempts to windsurf with the downed aircraft. This is not only an unlikely situation, but a near-impossible one. Although he is quite the hunk in this movie, there's no way he could have lifted the plane. McConhaughey's skin glistened under the Saharan sun, but this movie was not as bright. However, people will like this film because of the great cast and lively soundtrack.

Driving me crazy

Long commute, busy schedule leaves little time for rest have not driven as much in my entire life as I have since Jan. 7. Well, maybe that is a bit of an exaggeration, but not by much.

When I started school at KSU, everything looked simple on paper. Some night classes, a morning class, a couple of Saturday classes, seemed simple enough. And honestly, if I didn't have to drive 100 miles, round trip, I don't think it would be so bad. But I'm discovering something I had not considered when I began commuting to Kennesaw four days a week: commuting 100 miles per trip takes up a lot of time, especially sleep time.

I am one of those insane people that likes to believe they can do it all, if they just will themselves to do it. It's the Aries in me, I think. What you have to do, you see, is make a list of priorities. Sleep is not at the top on such a list. Some weeks, it's barely on the list, period.

I've discovered that sleep is not the only thing that has to go when one is commuting and attending classes, along with working a full-time job. Reducing my sleep time was in my original plan no real surprises there. But there are other things involved with school that I simply underestimated in my master plan.

example. To be a successful student,

Studying, for one must study. Many of the people I've chatted with in all age ranges and year categories tend to underestimate study time required when planning their day/ week/semester. It makes me feel better, knowing that I'm not alone in this area, but it doesn't change the fact that there are only so many hours

When I began this semester, I decided to take four classes. Not the smartest step I could have taken, but what can I say? I was caught up in the adrenaline of a new adventure.

Today that rush is quite

It's not that I am wavering on my commitment; I am glad I am at KSU, and I have every intention of pursuing my goals to the bitter end. But, I definitely made a beginner's mistake that I intend to correct next semester. At this point, I barely have time to visit the library, I've scheduled things so tightly - not smart, if I do say so myself.

So, for all of you guys out there who have crammed too many things into your days, and are feeling overwhelmed this semester, know that you are not alone.

Oh, and don't forget: When you are making your new list for summer, sleep actually is an essential activity — right up there with eating, breathing, and bathing.

Eating up a storm town last week because, to make ■ a long story short, I have a new ring on my finger. So of course my new wife and I were obligated to take them out a bit, show them our culinary habitats and see how they went with a few new tastes. To be honest, I'm pretty sure they've had pizza before, but having said that, pizza restaurants are a relative rarity back in Melbourne. They seem to be the driving force of Atlanta's economy, by contrast.

The point of this little piece is not to point out differences in cuisine - I believe I've already gone over that - but rather, differences in the way we eat and particularly when we eat out. In the United States, dining out seems to be the rule rather than the exception, but it's most definitely the other way around in Australia. The only time I ever really ate out a halfway decent restaurant was whenever one of my rellies turned 40. Aside from that it was pretty much a case of make-your-own-meal, or better yet, have mum cook up some

In the year that I've been in the United States, I've got in the habit of eating out pretty regularly. Friday and Saturday have become our ritual 'going out' nights, something I've been more than happy to do. Perhaps the biggest difference that I've found is the amount of time we actually spend. On a typical night out, my wife and I will probably spend no more than an hour at a restaurant, if it's slow. Even family gatherings are completed quite hastily - whether this is something that occurs in general, even in Georgia, I can't say for sure, but I have never noticed family groups staying for terribly long in any of the restaurants we've eaten at - probably because we don't particularly long either.

Perhaps the illustration that I've found of this difference has been on the odd occasions when I've eaten out with my wife's entire [American] family. The whole process, from being seated to paying the check, has never endured for any longer than about 45 minutes. Contrast this with our experiences when my parents came over. In our small family group of six, the nights we've had dinner with them never lasted less than an hour and a half, and that was when we went to a dodgy barbecue joint. The other groups who ate there [few that there were] didn't seem to stay any longer than twenty minutes. When we ate at a reasonably fancy restaurant in Smyrna, we stayed for almost three hours. I'd be surprised if there are many American family groups who have that kind of stamina. This is definitely true of the limited occasions I had to eat out in Australia. Even when with friends, whom I didn't tend to go and eat out with very often [usually because we'd order pizza or fish'n chips instead], a typical meal at a pub or bistro would last for two or more hours. The last meal I had with my friends before catching the plane over must have lasted for about four hours. Granted, the service was abominably slow but this seems to be a fairly typical experience when groups of people in Australia dine in a restaurant.

This difference may be because in Australia, people dine out rarely by comparison to Americans. For this very reason, there are never crowds of people waiting for a table, and so those who are dining don't feel compelled to rush, and instead linger for a few drinks and a chat. It seems that in many American restaurants, there are so many people eating out that it's almost mandatory to move on quickly, in order to open up a place for someone else. I'm certain this isn't a universal truth, but from a year of observation in many busy restaurants, there's definitely something in it.

Next time you dine out, though, keep this in mind when eating good food, there's no need to rush. Perhaps some advice I ought to follow next time I find myself dining out. If it doesn't make the experience more enjoyable, I will consider myself rebuked.

GAME REVIEW: GOD OF WAR

The myth becomes a war zone

Jason Nimer Sr. Staff Writer

apcom released 'Resident Evil the Nintendo Gamecube earlier this year. Since that game came out, it has remained largely unchallenged as the best action game of the year. Many thought "Devil May Cry 3" would unseat "Resident Evil 4," but that game fell just below fan expectations; it was short and boring to play.

Now the next challenger to "Resident Evil's" throne has emerged in the form of "God Of War" for Playstation 2. Will this excellent new action title rise to the top of the heap in the running for the game of the year? It comes close, but a few small, almost miniscule drawbacks hold "God Of War" back from legendary status.

"God Of War" tells the story of Kratos, a Spartan warrior in the service of the god of war, Ares. When Ares kills Kratos' family by accident, the warrior enlists the help of all the gods of Mount Olympus to bring his families' murderer to justice. This game's premise has you hunting and killing a Greek god.

The story, while original, serves as a backdrop to some of the most intense, fast paced and violent action the Playstation 2 has ever seen. After just a few minutes of play, you will be hurling bodies from one end of the screen to the other, dealing out punishment like an old pro. The fighting system in this game is what the terrible "Prince Of Persia: Warrior Within" attempted to accomplish. You will acrobatically destroy many foes, from undead soldiers to mythical sea monster the Kraken. Unfortunately, the interesting story and the "gotta see it to believe it" action is where the great side of this title ends.

The negatives begin with the graphics and sound. Though everything runs fairly smooth in this area, it is nothing spectacular and certainly nothing that has not been done better before. Another problem is "God Of War's" length. Casually playing this game ingly completed it in under 8 hours. Most big budget titles usually take no less than 20 hours for a beginning to end run through. Lastly, you have no control over the game's camera. Though this device is supposed to heighten tension, it only serves to get you killed by enemies you cannot see. This kind of oversight is unforgivable in today's gaming world.

over the last week, I surpris-

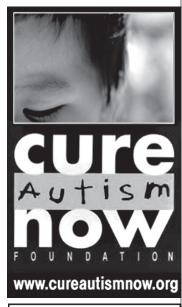

Most of you may think I was a bit harsh. Not at all, my friends. This is an exceptional game. Those small problems do not take away from the fact that "God Of War" lets you unleash your inner psycho, tearing your way through ancient Greece with reckless abandon. Few games this year compare to the simply amazing fun factor this game has to offer.

One warning: though this should be on any Playstation 2 owner's must play list, it is not for the little ones. Unless you'd like to irreversibly warp your child, put them to bed before you play this near masterpiece.

three game sweep of Peach Belt opponent Georgia College and State University may help KSU baseball steer the ship that has recently lost its way. The Owls won a double-header Saturday against the Bobcats 8-4, 6-5 and escaped Sunday with a 6-5 sweep of the weekend series.

Still ranked first in the Peach Belt and 18th in the nation, the Owls did not miss an opportunity to stop the bleeding from losing 12 of their last 20 games. The GC&SU Bobcats had their top pitcher Matt Goyen [6-0] on the mound to face a struggling Owls squad. Goyen came to face KSU with a 1.91 ERA and an opponent batting average of only .190.

GC&SU struck early with a run in the first inning after a single by Mike DeVeaux, a wild pitch, and another single to left by John Caruso that sent DeVeaux home from second. In the bottom of the first inning, KSU answered back when Goyen loaded the bases by allowing a single and two walks. With Ryan Apple at the plate with one out, Goyen plunked him, allowing Jeremy Brotherton to score. Adrian Colton then followed with a single, giving KSU a 3-1 lead. The score remained the same until the fourth inning when the Bobcats' Nick Trainor hit a Bubba Blaylock pitch over the right field fence, bringing the score to 3-2. The Owls added a run in the bottom of the fourth for insurance. Trainor struck again in the top of the sixth with a deep homerun over the center field runs on eight hits in 4 1/3 innings. wall, but brute strength could not contain the Owls' bats, which came alive in the seventh and eight innings, scoring four runs on five hits and sending Goyen to his first loss of the season, 8-4. In the second game of the doubleheader, the Owls allowed the Bobcats an early onerun lead but quickly jumped back into the game with a run of their own in the bottom of the second. In the bottom of the third, Scott Hendrix drew a two out walk and then stole second. Kevin Gergel doubled to right, scoring Hendrix. Apple then singled home Gergel with a base hit to center, giving the Owls a 3-1 lead.

A hit, a walk and an error lead to the Bobcats tying the game 3-3 in the fifth, but the Owls took advantage of an errant throw after back-to-back hits and regained the lead 4-3. KSU was able to get another run in the sixth after back-to-back doubles by Matt Nelson and John Kokotajlo, bringing the score to 5-3. That run proved very important as GC&SU scored two of its own runs in the top of the seventh, tying the game, 5-5. In the bottom of the seventh, the Owls' Brotherton was hit by a pitch. Hendrix and Gergel were then intentionally walked to load the bases.

Apple came to the plate next for the Owls looking for a sacrifice fly, but instead grounded out. The Bobcats' shortstop fired home for the force, but GC&SU's catcher Nick Waldrip let the ball slip out of his glove, and the Owls come away with the 6-5 victory.

The third and final game of the GC&SU series pitted Owls pitcher Ben Sosebee [5-2] against the Bobcats' Mike Bergstrom [3-3]. Sosebee won the battle, allowing only one hit in 5 2/3 innings to Bergstrom's four Hendrix was the big bat for the Owls as he went 4-5 on Sunday with 2 runs and an RBI, and Gergel provided the firepower with his 13th homerun of the season in the fifth inning. The Owls entered the ninth inning with a comfortable six run lead, but there was still some fight left in the Bobcats.

Senior Travis King entered the game in the top of the ninth to seal the a KSU victory, but walked the first three batters he faced, loading the bases for GC&SU's Justin Mills. Owls reliever Brent Jackson was then brought into the game to face Mills, who made the Owls pay as he doubled to left scoring two runs, all attributed to King. Another Bobcat then reached on a bunt single. The first out came when DeVeaux struck out swinging, but the Bobcats then singled to center, scoring two more for GC&SU and making KSU fans sweat a 6-4 game.

Casey Rogers entered the game as the third Owl pitcher of the inning. Rogers thought he had an easy out, but a throwing error allowed Trainor to reach and an unearned run to score. With the Bobcats within one run of the lead, Rogers got a huge break when GC&SU attempted a squeeze play with two strikes on the batter. The Bobcats missed the bunt on a wild pitch that KSU catcher Derrick Tucker had to retrieve as Caruso came racing home. Tucker tossed the ball to Rogers who tagged Caruso out at home to end the, game.

The Owls improved to 24-15, 14-7 in the PBC. KSU will play a one game home stand tonight at Stillwell Stadium against Alabama-Hunstville. The Owls end their season with a seven-game home stand starting April 20 against West Georgia.

Williams masterful when it mattered most

Knight Ridder Tribune

All Roy Williams had to do was come back to UNC to win his first ever National Championship.

UNC coach finally wins Championship after 16 seasons

Scott Fowler Knight Ridder Newspapers

They will never say never again about Roy Williams.

They will never say he can't win the big one. They will never say he's a good system coach, but not a good game coach.

They will never say he's 0for-the-Final-Four.

They will say he's a champion.

North Carolina won the national title against Illinois 75-70 on Monday night, losing all of a 15-point lead, then scoring the final five points to set off a jubilant celebration.

Williams' voice broke in his first interview after the championship with CBS but his team was not broken Monday. Williams coached a masterful game when it mattered most. The coach kept making the right little decisions, playing Raymond Felton through his foul trouble, switching to a zone to give Illinois a different look, shoving the ball inside to May even when Illinois double-teamed him.

After returning home to resurrect the program in 2003, it took Williams only two seasons to take his alma mater to the national title. He did it by melding great talent he mostly inherited from Matt Doherty into an unselfish team. The Tar Heels led the nation in scoring for the first time, but they also won with their defense during the NCAA tournament.

"I'm really not a better coach than I was three hours ago," Williams said, echoing something Dean Smith told Williams after the 1982 Tar Heels championship, Smith's

In front of a crowd of 47,262 that was 90 percent Illinois orange at the Edward Jones Dome, the Tar Heels sprinted to a 13-point halftime lead, but Illinois stormed back and tied the game at 70 with two minutes, 40 seconds left.

The Tar Heels made every big play after that. Marvin Williams tipped in a wild shot by Rashad McCants and then Raymond Felton stepped into the passing lane and intercepted a pass.

Felton made one of two free throws after being fouled. Down three, Illinois had a chance to tie the game, but Luther Head's three-point attempt [Illinois' 40th of the game bounced out. May tipped a rebound to Felton, who hit two free throws with 9.9 seconds left for the final margin.

"I didn't have to curse in the [postgame] interview tonight like I did two years ago," Williams said, laughing. His Kansas team lost to Syracuse in the final that season.

In a year in which one sports curse after another seems to have been lifted Phil Mickelson's slump in the majors, the Boston Red Sox's World Series jinx, Williams now has his title as well. He was quick to share it, praising his family, his North Carolina and Kansas players and Tar Heels fans.

Williams, 54, said he would bered forever.

never jump off a building if he didn't win a national championship. But I had the good fortune to sit 15 feet from him for the entire game, and believe me, he wanted it as badly as anyone at the arena.

Williams was on the refs by the time the game was two minutes old, complaining about an early foul against

"You better call that down there!" he said.

Rashad McCants scored 14 in the first half for North Carolina, but Williams looked happiest when McCants made a leaping save of a ball and called timeout while almost landing in his coach's lap. Williams pounded McCants happily, this was just the sort of behavior he wanted from his moody star.

His team played like that nearly all night. The players did what they should. Williams did everything he needed to.

And the 2004-2005 Tar Heels, led by an emotional, corny, well-loved coach from Asheville, NC, will be remem-

Corporate-named stadiums destroy meaning of the game

Tommy McNulty

Sports Editor

here are such things as ghosts in baseball. Tales have been told of players from past generations coming back as spirits and visiting their old stomping grounds. Major League Baseball has always been filled with history, lore, and most importantly, tradition. But these days, the game's rich history of tradition seems to be fading ever faster into oblivion. Much of the blame can be placed on the recent surge of corporate ownership and involvement in the last ten years, which has made the game more expensive and the "great American ballpark experience" anything but. Perhaps the most obvious result of corporatism's disease-like effect can be seen in the increasing number of stadiums named after these companies. There once was a time when stadiums were named to honor heroes [Philadelphia's Veterans Stadium], or to represent a city and its people [Pittsburgh's Three Rivers Stadium]. Our parents and grandparents went to these ballparks, where a person could walk past the front gates without being overwhelmed by hundreds of advertisements and excessive signs of commercialism. There were no Bellsouth karaoke stands or Cingular wireless kiosks between the individual and the seat. There were only ticket windows, food and beverage vendors and the

It wasn't until the late 1990s that corporatism exploded onto the baseball scene with such force that even ballparks more than thirty years old were forced to change their legendary names. Seattle's Kingdome became Safeco Field. Veterans Stadium was imploded and Citizen Bank Park became the Phillies' new home. Comiskey Park, home of the Chicago game itself. No distractions, just pure baseball.

White Sox for eighty years, was torn down. In its place now stands U.S. Cellular Field [a touching and meaningful name, no doubt].

One of the more original stadiums, in both name and style, was the Houston Astros' Astrodome. Known for its turf field and cookie-cutter stadium shape, the "Dome" was a beloved monument to almost all Houstonians. But in 2000, enticed by the money, the Astros stained their name when they > moved into Enron Field, which was owned by the company notorious for its bankruptcy and scandal. Realizing the error it had made, the organization changed the name in 2002 to yet another corporate name, Minute Maid Park.

> > All in all,

only twelve stadiums remain in MLB, six in each league, that are not named for a business, industry or corporation. Legendary organizations such as the Red Sox, Yankees and Cubs are probably the only teams that can be counted on not to "advertise" their stadiums. Think of the fan mayhem that would ensue if the likes of Fenway Park, Yankee Stadium or Wrigley Field were renamed to promote a bank or dot-com company. Such a move could seriously deter fan attendance in cities so consumed by base-

If MLB does not soon recognize how much it is distancing the game from its fans, excessive commercialism could very well bring an end to the nation's favorite national pastime. Teams need to realize that their sole reason for being revolves around their fans and cities.

The late, great Harry Caray knew what it was to actually love his city's stadium when he said, "Now, you tell me. If I have a day off during the baseball season, where do you think I'll spend it? The ballpark. I still love it. Always have, always will."

Why aren't you in class?

Should professors accept this excuse?

I've been around the block a few times. You'd think I'd know better than to rock the boat, but I just can't help myself. I want you to read an email I got the other day and see if you can find what's wrong with this picture. I'll give you a hint: it's not grammar, spelling, punctuation or diction.

Please join me tomorrow at the dedication of our new Convocation Center at 2 p.m. on Tuesday, April 5. Dr. Thomas Meredith, Chancellor of the University System of Georgia, and Mr. John Watson-Chief of Staff to Governor Sonny Perdue will be on hand to dedicate our newest campus facility. Any student who has class at 2 or 3 p.m. can receive a "Betty Buck" to present to your professor, showing that you were participating in the campus-wide convocation. Thank you and I look forward to seeing you tomorrow!

Dr. Betty Siegel President Kennesaw State University

So, do you see what's wrong? Don't you find it odd for our esteemed President to place a higher value on attendance at the Convocation Center Dedication Ceremony than whatever classes you were scheduled to attend at 2 p.m. and 3 p.m. on April 5? I can certainly understand her desire to get us involved. Too often, we wander through our days on cerebral autopilot. It is fantastic that we were able to draw such high profile speakers to our sleepy, backwater campus. Was it really important enough to trump class? If there is extra time in my classes, I'd sure like to get it back and save a few bucks on daycare.

The KSU Web site says, "First year students should plan to study two hours outside of class for every hour in class. Regular attendance is required, but instructors establish classroom policy regarding punctuality, absences, grades and make up work."

The phrase "regular attendance" should be enough to preclude this sort of interference, but what really makes me curious is the part about instructors establishing classroom policies. Is it possible that every professor who teaches a class on Tuesdays would voluntarily agree to let their students skip out on whatever learning activities were planned for that day? I doubt it. I'm sure that some of the faculty resented it. Whether they risked their jobs to voice their concern is another question.

Think about it for a minute. If you were a teacher trying to cram everything into the four short months allotted, would you appreciate your boss taking any of that valuable time from you? Now granted, some of our faculty are duds. A few of them have worse attendance problems than any of the students, but I am confident that they will eventually be taken care of. "My dog died." "My print cartridge got jammed." None of these excuses would fly if you were piloting them, possibly can to but because warm bodies were needed help us stretch to present a certain image at the dedication ceremony, your professors' autonomy and authority > for it when the boss overrides a sound, established

I had one professor who constantly told us the faculty are the people who really care about the students. I could see it bouncing off the foreheads of some of my classmates, but this situation really illustrates the case. I doubt that any of our professors would think it was a good idea to skip class to go to a dedication ceremony. They know that we are pushing ourselves to absorb the material. They go as slow as they possibly can to help us stretch our tiny minds around these giant concepts. They also know that many of the students who desperately need to be in class are the same students who jump at the opportunity to bail.

This is not an end of the world ate my homework." "My computer issue. It is unlikely that any of the students who took Dr. Siegel up on her offer will suffer too terribly. I doubt any of the faculty will push the issue so far as to lose their jobs, but this is a problem. It is a priority and example problem. I hope when I am faced with a similar situation, I will be able to detach from my excitement and make a dispassionate decision.

I can understand the excitement though. We've waited a long time for that particular building to be done. We booked top-notch speakers for the event, and it would have been a shame for them to think our student body was apathetic. I wonder how many people would have attended without the bribe. What I can't understand is how nobody considered the feelings of our faculty, or more importantly, the best interests of the students.

I know if I were one of the speakers, facing an unusually large crowd, my first question would be, "Why aren't you folks in class?"

Firestorm of controversy sweeps KSU

Will students ever read those words on our front page?

Dominic DiCecceo Columnist

Universities have been historically known to spawn political discourse via protests, marches and rallies. They even had so much fun at Kent State in 1970 that a few students got shot. The college campus has always been ideal for vocal and visible displays of opinion. On most everything from war to world trade, America's college students have never been reluctant to cry foul. While some may view this phenomenon as proactive and heartwarming, others see it merely as a bunch of whiny, middle-class morons who need to get jobs. Either way, the penchant of vocal discourse has defined the American university for decades, and KSU is no exception... right?

The next time you are walking to the Burruss building or Kennesaw Hall, take a look at the campus green. What are you more likely to see, an organized group of students protesting against Indonesian sweatshops, or people throwing a Frisbee around? I'm not saying that one is a better use of time than the other. I'm simply illustrating that KSU is an eerily quiet school with "There was a major upset in the

About year ago, when America was in the middle of war championship on in Iraq, mass protests and rallies the campus green were occurring around the world. Tear-gas canisters were thrown and riot gear was donned. Arrests were made and rubber bullets were flying. What was happening at KSU? Well, I did see about 30 people sitting outside the Student Center, painfully listening to a couple of people stating why they were against the war. The pity claps couldn't be heard from the parking lot. Besides that sham of wartime dissent, KSU was silent. I must also add that there was no significant movement among students in support of the war going to cut it. "There was a major upset in the Frisbee-throwing championship on the campus green today as blue-shirt dude managed to wear the competition down" is not go> ing to cut it. These well-known facts prompt the question, "Why is KSU such a reticent university?" The school has been on the rise in attendance and standards for years, yet it still remains miserably mundane. This significant lack of activity is apparent at Southern Polytechnic as well. Maybe Cobb County is adding sedatives to the water supply. That would explain the taste, but if that's not the cause, then I don't know what is.

Now before you turn to me and ask me what I personally have done to foster organized movement on campus, let me state that I just pulled the fire alarm in the student center. All joking aside, I have little defense against my own criticism. I have attended protests, but I have never been involved in any organized group or club on campus. You can call me a hypocrite, but at least I'm asking myself these questions and am urging you, my fellow students, to do the same.

Talking the talk

It's a matter of principle

I've been hearing and reading a few things lately that have disturbed me enough to want to tell you a story. This is a true story. None of the names have been changed.

In 1977, the National Socialist Party of America [AKA the American Nazi Party] decided they wanted to have a little march through Skokie, Illinois. Skokie is a suburb of Chicago with a large Jewish population. At the time something on the order of 15 percent of the Jews living in Skokie were either Holocaust survivors or directly related to a Holocaust survivor. So, the Village of Skokie said "no." The Village of Skokie then sought, and received, an injunction to prevent the NSPA from marching in Skokie on the basis of three new laws. I am sure that you know the rest of the story. You know that the American Civil Liberties Union came to bat for the NSPA. You know that at the time the ACLU was under the leadership of a Holocaust survivor named Aryeh Neier. You know that the lawyer who brilliantly defended the Nazis was David Goldberger, also a Jew. You know that the NSPA and the ACLU won their case. You know that the ACLU lost 30,000 contributors, mostly Jewish, over their decision to defend the Nazis. Moreover, you know that, in the end, the NSPA never did march on Skokie.

Jonathan

Edman

But why did the ACLU come to the defense of the NSPA? Were Neier and Goldberger self-loathing Nazi sympathizers? Did the ACLU believe that National Socialism was the best answer for America? Had fear of McCarthyism caused the ACLU to feel the need to prove they were as right wing as the Führer himself?

No. The ACLU jumped into this fight on the side of the Nazis because of the principle at stake. Our first Amendment rights are very clear. We have the right to say what we want, regardless of how distasteful or unpopular it may be. There are clearly established limits to what constitutes "protected speech" and the ACLU rightly believed that the NSPA's demonstration very clearly fell into the "protected" category.

So, why am I using up valuable column space with this history lesson? Because I keep hearing people misstate the reasons why the ACLU does what it does. Does the ACLU

"Were Neier and Goldberger selfloathing Nazi sympathizers?"

defend the North American Man Boy Love Association's right to publish a pamphlet discussing sexual relations between men and boys because they support pedophilia? No, they do it because they believe that our free speech rights are important, and that speech which is unpopular is ultimately the most important to protect.

If I were to go stand on the green tomorrow with a big sign that read, "President Siegel is the best university president that has ever held office in Georgia," I might be accused of being a suck-up, but no one would challenge my right to state my opinion. However, if I were to have a sign demanding her resignation, for whatever reason I felt it was appropriate, would I have any less right to state my case? In fact, might it not be even more important that I be heard?

That is exactly why the ACLU defends groups like the Nazis and NAMBLA. Not because they agree with what the Nazis are saying, but because it is especially important that the Nazis be allowed to speak their minds. Frankly, if we can convince ourselves that the Nazis should be censored, it is not much of a stretch to decide that you should be censored also, especially if you decide that the government has done something wrong and you want to let people know.

No one wants to hear what they have done, or are doing wrong, but ultimately our ability to police our government lies in the eyes, ears and voices of our citizens. If we allow that voice to be silenced, we have lost our first, and best, defense against tyranny. With no one fighting beside you, your right to keep and bear arms won't protect you for long.

Can I see your ID?

I just don't see what the big deal is, unless you're trying to cheat

Following the controversial 2000 presidential election, many Liberals screamed and howled about what a miscarriage of justice Bush's election was. In the last five years, there have been accusations of voter fraud, voters being denied the right to vote as well as improprieties by election officials. Even after a decisive re-election, many Liberals are still whining about alleged miscarriages of justice in Ohio, which gave the President an unfair advantage. Incredibly, some have even been crying about having to wait over an hour to Recognizing how critically important it is to maintain the integrity of the electoral process, the Georgia State Legislature has passed new regulations regarding identification at polling places. Under these new provisions, voters would be required to show a state photo ID when they vote. Previously, they were permitted to use bills, bank statements and other nonphoto ID. Although this was well intentioned, it did allow people to vote illegally. Such illegal voting has long favored able to get your way and want to the Democratic Party. Once they realized that the key voting constituencies of illegal voters might be threatened, they went on the attack.

At the forefront of the Democrats' efforts to derail this legislation were prominent African-American legislators like Senator M. Kasim Reed. Unable to defeat the bill or effectively debate the issue on its merits, they chose to resort to the Democrats' favorite weapon, demagoguery.

Velarde Democrats nounced the bill as a return to the Jim Crow laws and another form of racial oppression. To use such hateful rhetoric is an insult to those who suffered true racial oppression, marched with Dr. King and fought to have the Civil Rights Act passed. They would be appalled that opportunists seek to use their suffering for political advantage. The suffering of others is not supposed to be used as a last resort when you are unthrow a guilt trip on the legisla-

Nonetheless, they continued crying about how the poor and disadvantaged may not have access to a state photo ID facility. What about the poor and homeless that wanted to vote in the past, but could not present a bill to identify themselves? Each day we are required to present a photo ID if we want to buy alcohol or see an R-rated movie. Heck, I have to show a photo ID to get my prescription refilled. I want to be confident in the knowledge that when I go to vote, my identity must be verified and is not being used to someone else's advantage.

Thankfully, the bill passed, and Governor Perdue is planning to sign it. More states are beginning to take notice and adopt similar measures. This will help ensure that the dead aren't rising on Election Day and heading to the polls with my identity as a tool to advance their agenda.

Not always the Higher One

According to a fully official, scientifically validated poll taken at the Sentinel's Web site, 64 percent of KSU students polled claimed the card was "simply a waste of space in their wallet." I tend to be among that 64 percent. This does not necessarily mean the Higher One program is a money-sucking leech on the university's budget.

you put it that way... Having never personally received any funds deposited into my Higher One account, I cannot offer personal testimony. However, I can say Beau Harper anything that saves our university time and money, money that can be spent directly on academics, has to be a good thing. So whether or not you agree with carrying a Higher One card, all evidence points to this program being a good thing.

Think about it. Would you rather see your disbursement funds directly deposited into your account, which you have direct access to, or would you

It's a double-edged sword. You could take either side and extensively argue each case. In the mean time, I tend to stick to the side that says this is a step forward for the university, allowing for faster and easier disbursement of student refunds. If there's anything a college student needs, it's the faster and easier arrival of money into their bank accounts.

So mine continues to sit in my desk drawer at home, eagerly awaiting the day when I am owed money and the university conveniently gives it back. I am fairly sure there are some pros and cons that I have not addressed. Like anything, Higher One is by no means a perfectly working system.

Spider sense malfunctioning

Dear Editor,

There is an echo throughout the Viewpoints Section of the Sentinel that has been ringing on the pages for some time now. Once again, Dalton has found a new way to pass the guilt for every political issue onto a religion that has "hijacked the FDA and is trying to impose its view of morality on the rest of us." He wrapped the blame in the neat package of Emergency Contraceptive Pills. I hope Dalton will forgive my presumptuous opinion in assuming that the religion he is talking about is what the Sentinel has referred to in the past as "The Christian Right Morality Elite."

Apparently, they are to blame for rolling the ball of oppression over the United States. They are the ones feeding the fires of oppression against women's rights, oppression of homosexuals and if I'm reading correctly, they're even to blame for the oppression of cartoon characters. I wasn't aware that, when pastors talk about turning from our sinful ways, they were preaching to Barney Rubble as much as the congregation.

There are plenty of people who believe in the sanctity of marriage and the fetus. Many have no religious ties at all. I have even heard of a particular atheist who believed in banning homosexual marriage. I believe while his God of Naturalism may differ from the God of Christianity, this particular principle of the two are the same.

Many people possess the same morals as Christians without having a connection to Christ. Dalton has made many sophistical criticisms against Christians for certain political movements when, in fact, there is a larger population that he has not taken into account. The Editor might think he is special in that he is somehow aware that Christians are at the core of all political dilemmas.

I would guess that Dalton's spider sense could be better attributed to his apparent arach-
