

work begins on the U. S. Capitol's new east front...

You probably read about it in your newspaper. When the contract was awarded The Georgia Marble Company, the amount was $2,783,650 — the largest single contract ever awarded a marble producer. But this is much more than a multi-million dollar contract for your Company. It is a work of historical significance, certainly the most important ever undertaken in the history of Company operations. Right now, Company engineers and artisans are hard at work on the new Capitol extension, making plans and producing the materials that will replace the crumbling sandstone, provide additional legislative facilities, and, of course, meticulously reproduce the original design. Scheduled to be completed for the inauguration of our next president, the Capitol's east front will not only be soundly rebuilt with special Georgia White Marble — one of the world's finest and most enduring materials — it will also be an even more beautiful and lasting source of national pride.
