A FTER the effabilithment of Peace and independence on this Continent, all Europe, and in particular the rading nations, looked upon this country as a flourishing empire, which on account of the large quantity of fruitful land it contains, would be the magazine of agricultural pro-must apply themselves to the mechanical arra and manuface tures; and hoped that they would draw from this part of the world, the necessaries of life, in exchange for the produces of their manufactories. The first and fecond year the merchants of the world, who would with to draw the furplus from one part and supply the other that is in want, run; for inftead of receiving provisions in return for the would be made but cafe, which was to be feat to Poland and Ireland to buy grain and beet; and when America was drained of its calls, the people feeling their incapacity for makine eayments for debts contracted, initesd of using the imported facuries more sparingly, and applying themselves with more indultry to agriculture, they fluited to find out wars all means to defraud their creditors; and being yet habituated, to the legal and illegal opprettions, which efcrped unpunished during the war, when large debts were paid fame mode of proceedings, and framed tender laws, or war against each other, togain a change for plander. This was certainly aboung liberty, and greatly disappointing those collicians in Europe, who exceded to learn of America, the happings of a truly Republican empire. being ; therefore they flould have a government endued with fufficient power, to check the progress of the wicked and to protect the virtuous. But the nice point in eftablift ing this government, is to prevent it from oppressing the community at large, and that the rulers thatt not shale their nower and enflave the fabiefts. For had men will always be active in milchief. This feems so be tionalifts. But I should think this fafpicion to be ill-founded, and that the rightr and liberties of the people will re-main fafe, and be held forced, if only at the days of the the best of their knowledge, to chuse the best man among felfish and act fo much against his disposition and principles, flituents miferable; only because it might be of some benefit for himfelf during the thout time he thould be in office. and then subject himself and posterity, under the same voke which he has framed. No one will atk-Where is that ecnerous and benevolent man, against whose principles and disposition it would be, to introduce and establish an oppresfive law when he can do it? Or is there really one, who dares doubt to find fuch a man among 30,000 of his fellow citi-zens? That one deferves to be anlived, and all the 29,999 with him, if there is not one honest man among them, that could be trufted for two years, with the effice of a reprefentative in Congress; it is much better for the world to have 20,000 flaves more in it, than fo many sysants and villains, which they would be if they were at liberty to act as they pleafed. This argument my antifederalitis, will heart which, fimilar to all human nature, will measure other people's corn with his own buffel. You must brine more perfusiive reasons, if the new conflitution shall not be mankind is worthy of the free will, the grand gift of the Creator, and capable of a republican government, or if devour each other if they had power and liberty. If this last should prove to be the cafe in America, it will foon throw the flates into the utmost confusion, and the European powers will in pity divide you among themfelves, and keep you in future, under better fulordination. Until that will be complexed, he that has the leaft to lofe, will have the best change of gain. That either a firm and uniform govern-

go to a diffolution, is the ardent wifn of a former friend, and principal creditor to American individuals, FOREIGNER.

MR. O'CONNOR has returned from the fouthward to make arrangements for committing the first volume to the Profs; and he affures his subscribers, that the meehanical part will be completed with the utmost attention.

Then thefe proposals were first published, their imprefion on the public mind, and their success, were equally uncertain, confequently it was judged indelicate, in fuch a state of apprehension, to receive any pecuniary support towards a spublication which might fall—through defect of public spirit, or many local circumstances which generally existed, to repress zeal in the promotion of literary endeavours.

Experience however has proved these scars imaginary, as the most liberal and general support has been obtained for thefe Propositions, wherever they were communicated-This indulgence and patronage engrave on the breat of the writer, fentiments of affection and grateful remembrance, not to be effaced; and it is with peculiar fatisfaction he and his affigirs will receive a part of the price of these volumes towards discharging expences in diffensibly connected to the
