A German Grammar;

Containing—The Theory of the Language through all the Parts of Speech.

By JOHN JAMES BACHMAIR, A. M. To which are prefixed,

RULES

FOR PRONUNCIATION and SPELLING.

PREFACE.

THE German language is much used in this State; it is a language of great compass, energy, expressiveness and variety. These excellences, however, for want of proper helps and due attention, are known but by a few. The fluency of it is becoming now an object of respect particularly in this city; not only among the Germans themselves, but others, especially young men of liberal education. For the accomplishment of such, this Grammar hath been carefully prepared: it will be found to contain every thing that is essential in BACHMAIR'S GRAMMAR, yet in a more concise form; and consequently may be purchased at a considerably lower price.—The Editor intended it principally for the University of Pennsylvania, where at certain hours, daily, the Students are exercised in speaking and writing German. The method adopted in this respect, and the opportunities that may be had continually in Philadelphia of conversing in the language, render it necessary to retain in this book the exercises or practical parts of BACHMAIR. But instead thereof the Student will here meet with a number of very necessary rules for pronunciation, spelling, &c. not to be found in the other Grammars.

his patience, would get the better of every inconvenience. I was so fortunate, however, in the choice of M. de Vergeres, had more of Mr. Kain to rely upon than in the quality of secretary interpreters; and the intimacy which very few took place between these two young men, by giving animation to their gaiety, rendered their society more agreeable to me: it was, indeed, the only remaining society I had, for I could not flatter myself with the prospect of deriving much advantage from a month's stay taken at Yaffa, and two weeks at Jerusalem, any more than from the company of Mr. Forestry, who was to leave me and return to Candianople as soon as his local and official information became unnecessary to me.

My arrival was immediately announced to the wife of the Kam, and his prime minister, assuring me of the foundation his matter would have in feeling me as soon as I was disposed to have my first audience by the prince. This custom consisted in my receiving by myself the person whom it is meant to gratify. Throughout the East, gifts are always the mark of honour, obliged, therefore, to submit to this kind of distinction, I transferred my Taly to the residence of my little German colony; but although this favour was sufficient to furnish it abundantly, my attendants saw no means for providing for my personal wants. Reduced to bread, rice, and mutton, and some lean poultry, we were not content with very indifferent viands, before I could conceive that I should in other butter, vegetables, or fish, on the best soil in the world, and in the neighbourhood of the sea, but from under food that is cultivated as a plant in the Kam's garden; that the Tatars did not know how to make butter; and that the inhabitants of the sea coast were no better mannered than those on the plains, therefore I was obliged to submit. My servants, however, discovered some frontonous vegetables, which I collected a little, and I took measures to get some from Constantinople and hired a countryman, where I established my Germans, to whom I gave some cows; and my new farm very soon supplied me with abundance of every thing. I determined also to make my own bread: one of my servants became an excellent baker; and the pleasure of having found out the means of obtaining it, gave an additional relish to our good cheer.

I was waiting for some presents for the Kam, which never arrived, but I had my first audience, but the importance of Makindou Guerau, then on the throne of the Tatars, removed every difficulty. On the day appointed for the delivery of my credentials, the matter of the ceremonies waited on me with a detachment of the guards, and some officers appointed to escort me to the palace. Our cavalcade, half European, half Tartar, drew together a great number of people. We alighted in the last court, and I was the pillar, who was waiting for me in the vestibule of the palace, conducted me to the audience chamber, where we found the Kam seated on the corner of a sofa. A chair was placed opposite to him, where I seated myself, after paying my compliments to the prince and delivering my credentials. This first ceremony, which intimated me in my public capacity in Tartary, was followed by the civilities practiced amongst the Turks, and lay an invitation from the Kam to visit my own house frequently. I was then conducted back to my own house in the same order. The following days were taken up in paying the usual visits to my friends, and endeavouring to form such connections as might gratify my desire of becoming acquainted with the government, the manners and the customs of the Tartars; and the Mulla, a man of abilities, of strict honour, and capable of a strong attachment, was one of those with whom I formed the greatest intimacy, and from whom I derived the most useful information.

After attending principally to the objects, I thought it necessary to endeavor, before the winter attacked me in my hut, to secure myself against the inclemency of the weather, and to engage and repair it, which was pretty nearly the same thing as to rebuild it. We were now in the month of November, and no time was to be lost. I drew a plan, I collected the materials, and superintended the work, without departing from the method of building pursued by the Tartars; and I got tolerably well lodged in the month of December, at the expense of about 1000 rials (about 250 l. sterl.) I shall take this opportunity of describing the structure of the houses in Crimea; but these details, or the architecture of the Tartars, will be of more use to the lovers of economy, than to disciples of Vitruvius.

Pillars placed on the points which terminate the angles and the openings placed perpendicularly by an architecture which supports the joists, appears the way for the execution of the upper part of the building, which is formed in the same manner to receive thick arches. The building, thus supported, the pillars which are smaller, at a foot's distance from each other, but perpendicular also, occupy the folds, and are defined to hold together the luzzle rods, which give the house the appearance of a baker's; pounded earth, and cut straw, are then applied to this sort of hurdle, after which, a layer of lime and hair, laid on internally and externally, added to the painting of the pillars, the doors, the plinths, and the windows, give the whole of the building, a very pleasing appearance.

I must add, that this manner of building has infinitely more solidity than might be imagined from the description, and is certainly more salutary than that of our peasants' houses. I am farther convinced, that gentlemen of estates, who, either from motives of interest or benevolence, are desirous of building houses with the view of increasing and favoring the population of their dependants, and in this every way by adopting this manner of building, in which they would find great economy, and enable the inhabitants to make their own repairs, which will certainly appear the most important advantage.

Having now got a tolerable dwelling, and in a very short time it became necessary for me to look out for furniture. Myeward was the upholsterer, and I took upon myself the joiner's work, and the turnery; these occupations, together with my private affairs, and my visits to the Kam, gave me a continual and varied employment, which filled up all my time.

Makindou Guerau had admitted me into his private parties, which were composed of Sultan Nonardin, his nephew, a mirza of the Chirins, called Kaima Mirza, who was the husband of a sultana, cousin-german to the Kam; of the Kadi Lekker, and of some other mirzas. This prince used to receive us after the prayer of sun set, and keep us till midnight. More difficult from him than from disposition, Makindou Guerau, easily presided, retired with the same reason, to whatever could restore the tranquillity of his mind, and render every thing agreeable about him. With more knowledge than usually falls to the share of the Oriental, he was fond of literature, and discoursed on it with satisfaction. Sultan Nonardin, brought up in Circassia, spoke but little, and only talked of the Circassians. The Kadi Lekker, on the contrary, was very loquacious, and talked of every thing; he was informed, but of a lively disposition, he very frequently departed from the gratuity of his situation, to enliven our conversation. Kaima Mirza furnished all the news of the day; whilst I entertained them with those of Europe, and answered all their troublesome questions. The etiquette of this court allows very few persons to be seated in the presence of the sovereign; the few who have this privilege, never sit down before their father. This privilege is granted also to the heads of the law, to the ministers of the divan, and those of foreign courts; but excepting Kaima Mirza, who was seated in quality of a husband of a sultana, the other courtiers stood at the foot of the sofa, and withdrew at supper time. This repast was served on two round tables, one of which, spread before the Kam, was set apart for his Tartar guests, who usually sat alone, and never departed from the etiquette but in favour of some sultan distinguished by his age, or who is himself a sovereign. The second table, prepared in the same room, is for the persons whom the Kam admits to supper. I eat at this table with the Kadi Lekker, and Kaima Mirza. Makindou Guerau always amused himself with encouraging the little differences of opinion which a sort of disputation between the judge and me, and in which the accuracy of his judgments, than the amusement of his matter. Our discussions were so different, that it was impossible to dispute his favour by the same means but I did not neglect it, which I thought might please the prince. I had a card that he was fond of fireworks, and the ignorance of his artificers was ill calculated to gratify his taste. I got ready the implements, prepared the materials, and intimated my attendants; and when I thought myself capable of fulfilling my duty, I asked permission of the Kam to exhibit a few fireworks, which he graciously granted, as he had been to see nothing but smoky serbes, bad crackers, and small rockets, badly filled, and ill directed, the success of my exhibition was complete.

COAL TAR.
A QUANTITY of this Tar, and of black and clear Varnish extracted from Coal, is just arrived, to be sold for ready money only, by Charles Wilkes,
No. 12, Hanover Square, New York.
The first of America for the British Tar Company.
THE hope of excellence of this Tar in preserving the bottoms of vessels from the worms, and its keeping them clean, has been proved by repeated experiments.
It has been also found to be an excellent preservative of cast and wrought iron from rust. A description of the different kinds of Coal Tar and Varnish made by the British Tar Company, and of the various uses they may be applied to with the greatest advantage, with directions for using them, may be had as above. 19th Sept. 1788.

The following Certificate of an experienced master in New-York, is added for the Information of the Public.
New-York, April 26 1788 WE the subscribers do hereby certify, that on or about the 18th June last, we attended at Van Tay's wharf, on the East river, in this city, where we examined three pieces of timber, all of the same dimensions, one paved over with Lord Dundonald's lime-invented Coal Tar, the other two pieces with a stout sort of common ship stuff (pitch, tar, oil and sulphur); that we afterwards saw them all chained to and sunk along into said wharf.
That nearly six months after, viz. on the 5th of December following, we again attended at said wharf when, in our presence, they were all taken up, and on examining them, the piece done over with the Coal Tar appeared clean and entirely free from grubs and vermin; the other pieces were very foul, one of them was almost covered with vermin; that on cutting them in several places we found the worms in the bottom of the piece paved with the ship stuff, scarcely an inch having elapsed from the piece done over with the Coal Tar was perfectly free from them, and as found and fresh as when put down.
From the above experiment we are fully of opinion, that the Coal Tar will preserve the bottom of ships from vermin and the worms, and is worthy of the greatest encouragement.

Three Guinea Reward,
FOR taking up and securing a NEGRO WOMAN, named JOAN; about 27 years old, of a middle size, and rather thin; her daughter, Sall, a mulatto girl, about 10 years, and her son Frank, a mulatto boy, about 8 years old: she was supposed to be pregnant when she left Annapolis, in Maryland, last fall; she was often seen about the Crooked Billet and the adjoining wharves. The above Reward will be paid for the three, or One Guinea each, by applying to EDWARD WIDLER, at Mr. Dennison's, the corner of Arch and Second Streets.
Any person acquainted with said Woman, may be convincing that she ought not to be concealed. E. W.

WAS committed to the Gaol of the borough of Lancaster, on the 9th of Sept. last, a NEGRO MAN, named BOB; about 5 feet 9 or 10 inches high; a very good looking Negro; says he is a tanner by trade, and that he runs away from a certain John Allison, in the county of Baltimore, late of Maryland. Any person or persons claiming said Negro, or proving his property within three weeks from the date hereof may have him again, otherwise he will be sold for his fees.

A new Academy
IS instituted in Arch, near Front Street, in the House lately occupied by John Poor, for the Instruction of Youth of both Sexes, in an English Education; particularly the following Branches of useful Learning, viz. Reading, Writing, the English Grammar, Arithmetic, Book-keeping, Geography, the Use of the Globes, and other useful Branches of the Mathematics, at 17/6 per Quarter each scholar. The Girls and Boys kept in different Apartments; for which purpose separate Rooms and Yards are provided.
The whole School subject to the direction and government of the subscriber, superintending Master of said Seminary, in conjunction with Joseph Stephen, Esq. and Peter Dutton, Esq. B. Say, Doctor Wm.
W. Smith—Overseers appointed to attend the Public Examinations of said School, once in 2 months, when Prizes will be distributed to the greatest Proficient in each Class, in order to excite, and promote a laudable Spirit of Emulation in the Pupils.
This Institution is established upon such principles as to inculcate moral sentiments into the minds of the pupils, at the same time they are improving in literary knowledge: an excellent collection of Books, having been selected by the Master for the use of the School, and particular attention paid to those most essential branches of education, relate to grammar, reading and spelling, so as to give the children an early knowledge of the use of the books, emphasis an excellence, in reading. In point of pronunciation, Sheridan's standard is principally adopted, being the most approved Author.
Those who are pleased to favor this Seminary with encouragement, may depend on the utmost care and attention paid to their children.
TESSE WATERMAN.
A NIGHT SCHOOL
Is now Opened at the above Academy, for the Instruction of Youth who cannot conveniently attend in the day time—The terms for teaching are 15/ per quarter.

French Language.
J. D. HAMELIN, anxious to answer the expectations of the Gentlemen who have appointed him TEACHER OF THE FRENCH LANGUAGE in the University of Pennsylvania, informs his Friends and the Public, that he will spare no trouble to complete the education of the pupils who are already committed to his care, and to bring forward, as fast as possible, all those who shall be disposed to study under his tuition or direction—He hopes that his patrons will continue their encouragement to him in the arduous task in which he is engaged, and believe that his exertions will be as great as the favors they have themselves demanded—He will thank those who intend to join his school to call on him at the University, where he attends from half after eleven o'clock in the morning till half after one, and from five o'clock in the afternoon till nine in the evening: this latter attendance is more particularly designed for grown gentlemen.
Ladies or Gentlemen who wish to be taught privately, by leaving their name and place of abode with the Janitor of the University, or at Mr. De la Croix's, Grocer, in Second Street, above Race Street, may be waited upon at any hour of the day which will not interfere with his stated appointments at the University.
At the request of his scholars, Mr. Hamelin has made it a rule of his school, not to allow any pupil, during the hours of attendance, to speak English to any one but his teacher, and a particular day in each week will be fixed for improvement in the speaking part only. Sept 25 mwlft
