New Organizational Structure Approved

An administrative organization for Southern Technical Institute was approved by the Board of Regents at the May 12-13 meeting. The organization, as recommended by Southern Technical Institute President Stephen R. Chesier, was approved to become effective on July 14, 1981. It is designed to support Southern Technical Institute's special educational mission in engineering technology.

"According to President Chesier, a rigorous process was undertaken on campus to analyze administrative needs and to develop an organizational structure that will serve Southern Technical Institute well as a senior-level University System institution," the Regents were told through an agenda item.

President Chesier met with each of the institution's administrative and faculty units to discuss organizational proposals; and, following submission of the organizational structure to the Board of Regents office, he met several times with staff members of the Board's office, the Regents were told. Those meetings resulted in a "much leaner, but still efficient, organization," the Regents were also told.

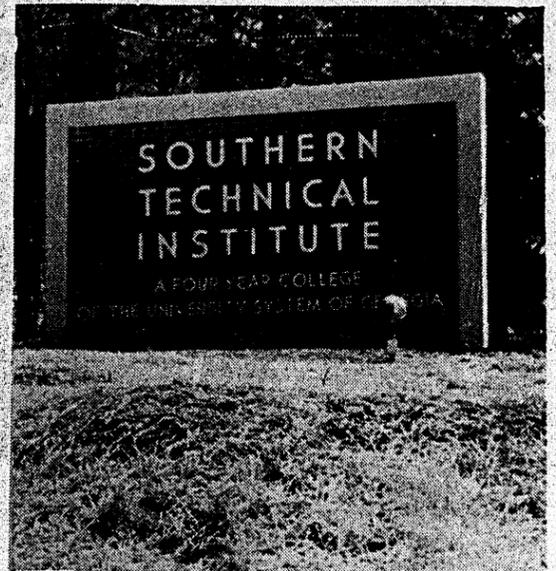

research and access; and director of public relations.

Southern Technical Institute became a senior college of the University System on July 1, 1980. Previously, the institution had been a division of the Georgia Institute of Technology since it was opened as a two-year division in 1948. Southern Tech became a four-year division of Georgia Tech in 1970.

Under the administrative organization:

--Five new positions will be required--vice president and dean of the faculty; director of industrial relations, institutional research and access; student center coordinator; director of continuing education; and head of the Department of Computer Engineering Technology--at a cost of $153,000 annually. The positions will be filled and the administrative organization will be implemented as budget support becomes available.

--Six administrators will report to the president--vice president and dean of the faculty; dean of student affairs; vice president for business and finance; director of development and college relations; director of industrial relations, institutional

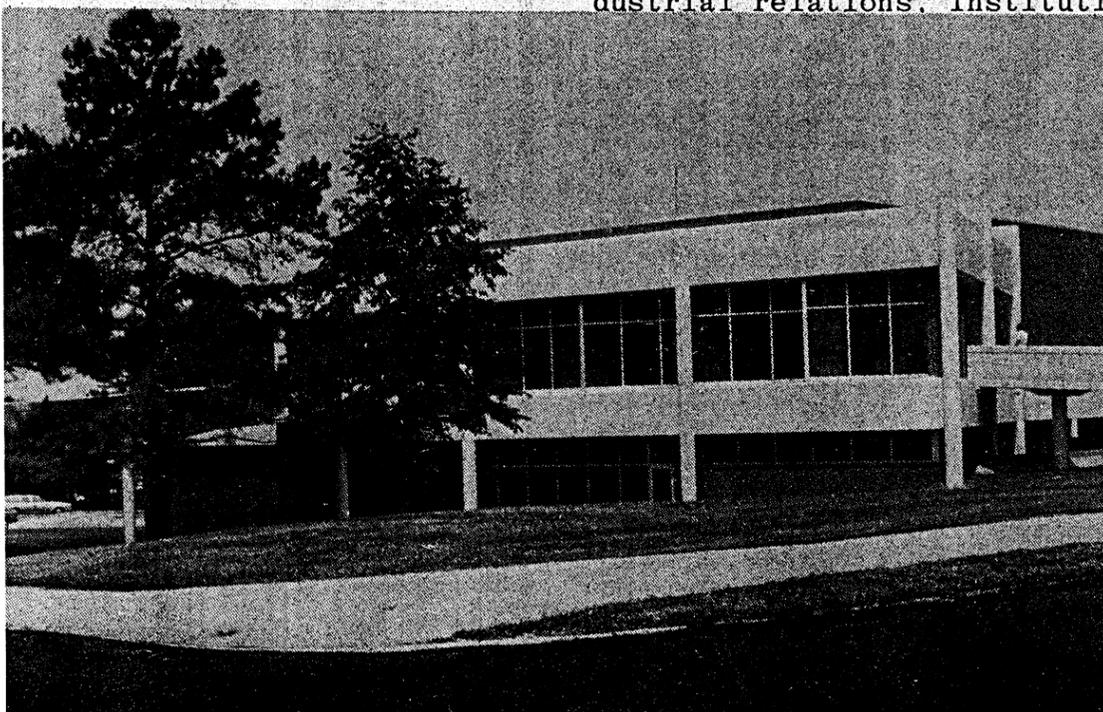

HAPPY ANNIVERSARY SOUTHERN TECH

Southern Technical Institute officially became a senior college, the 33rd institution of the University system of Georgia, on July 1, 1980. The occasion resulted in the dissolution of Southern Tech's status as a four-year division of the Georgia Institute of Technology.

The Story Of Leo Frank

Justice For Editors' Corner All? The Case of Leo M. Frank

Leo Frank

Editor's note:

When Wayne Williams was arrested last month in connection with one of the deaths of Atlanta's missing and murdered young blacks, the story of Leo Frank came back to me: a city gripped with fear and emotion amplified by a media blitz with a suspect in hand. The situation was similar in 1913 here in Atlanta. The following is a term paper I wrote one year ago for English 112 here at STI. I wish to make only one point by printing this piece--that we should never assume anyone guilty until he is proven so by a fair trial to a point beyond any shadow of a doubt. I feel very strongly that our judicial system can make a mistake. When this happens, an innocent man is punished while the guilty party keeps his freedom, or even worse, keeps on killing. If we electrocute Mr. Williams, let's make sure he is convicted on the basis of unquestionable and impregnable evidence, not upon a multitude of sensationalism and assumptions.

Part one of two in this series will cover the murder, the arrest and the trial in the Leo Frank case. Part two will be printed in the next issue.

By Allen D. Bearden

Prejudice against minorities and foreigners is nothing new in America. We have at different points in our history hated the Jews, Blacks, alleged witches, Communists, and other types of people that we do not understand.

The anti-semitic feelings in the southern United States boiled over in 1913. A young factory working girl, born and raised in the south, was strangled and beaten to death.

July 17, 1981

Her supervisor at the plant, one Leo Frank, a young Jewish industrialist, was convicted of the murder. After then Governor of Georgia Slaton commuted his death sentence, a mob of 25 took him out of his cell and strung him up to a large oak tree in Marietta.

The guilt of Frank is extremely doubtful. He was convicted solely on the testimony of a semi-literate admitted liar. But the debate concerning the probability of Frank's guilt is a different matter. I wish only to establish the case that Leo Frank did not receive due process of law at the hands of the Georgia court system.

The body of 13-year-old Mary Phagan was discovered in the basement of the National Pencil Factory in Atlanta on April 27, 1913. Her hair was matted in her own blood and a length of jute rope had been tied so tightly around her neck that it was imbedded in her skin. Later reports confirmed that she had not been raped. Two scrawled notes allegedly naming a tall black man as the killer were found with the body.

Mr. Frank was working in his office when Mary Phagan came in to collect her wages from the previous week. It was shortly past noon on the day of the murder. He paid her and she left, according to Frank. Mary never got out of the building. Someone smashed her skull, strangled her with the jute rope and then dragged her down in the basement. She was discovered 13 hours later.

The police were summoned and Newt Lee, the night watchman who had found the body, was detained under suspicion. Within a week, seven men were arrested for the crime. One of these men was Leo M. Frank.

Leo Frank was born in Paris, Texas in 1884. His parents moved to Brooklyn and gave their son a typical Jewish middle class upbringing, and put him through Cornell University in 1906. He married Lucille Selig and took a job in Atlanta from his uncle, Moses Frank, as the first foreman of the National Pencil Factory in Atlanta.

He was picked up because he was the last person to see Mary alive except for the murderer. Detectives suspected Frank because he acted nervous following the murder; but few people wouldn't be nervous upon finding a body in their basement.

The newspapers immediately took off on the case. Mary Phagan's murder had horrified the people of Atlanta. When Frank was arrested, a wave of anti-semitism began to crest. The papers knew the public wanted to hear about a Jewish suspect and wasted no opportunity to exploit the situation.

The press assumed Frank's guilt because the people wanted him to be found guilty. William Randolph Hearst's Atlanta Georgian tried for headlines that made the reader "recoil in shock". This paper tripled its circulation during the Phagan murder case by printing 10 full pages in four months about the incident.

The Atlanta Journal and the Atlanta Constitution (two competing dailies at that time) found themselves having to amplify and twist the facts in order to keep up with Hearst.

Every tale or half-truth that anyone dreamed up seemed to hit the front page. For example, while questioning Newt Lee, a detective told a reporter that "We have evidence in hand which will clear up the mystery." The next day, the Georgian ran a headline saying (Newt) "Lee's Guilt Proven." A picture of Leo Frank was printed on one occasion and was captioned "Monster". Obviously, the Georgian thought him guilty until proven innocent.

The paper also invented the story that Frank had pictures of nude women hanging in his office. In reality, the pictures were of smiling girls, fully clothed.

Two older ladies said they had received revelations envisioning the physical features of the killer. The description they gave basically but not completely fit Leo Frank. All three of the Atlanta papers printed these ridiculous stories on the front page in bold headlines.

The Journal carried an article ing several accusing questions Mr. Frank, such as, "If Leo Frank didn't kill her, where was he at the time of the murder?" The piece also asked, "Why was he shaken when the police questioned him?" In effect, the journal asked Frank to prove that he didn't kill Mary Phagan.

Everyone else in Atlanta thought Frank guilty as well. The sensationalism in the press convinced the public that the accused was a "Monster" and stimulated a cry for his blood. Cheers to lynch the Jew came in before the trial.

The police were also convinced of his guilt. They directed their efforts at establishing a case against Frank and at the same time ignoring incriminating leads against other individuals.

Even Tom Watson, whose destiny was to collide with Frank's after the trial, said that the accused had "about as much chance as a cowball in hell".

The investigation took place under the watchful eye of a mob. Testes to officials said, "Hang the Jew or we'll hang you". At times when no statements came from the Atlanta Police Department, the press would make up for the lull in the action by running insignificant developments or editorials on the front page in bold headlines, claiming major breaks in the case. Police were often criticized in the papers for lack of action, so they made sure they arrested someone pretty often to avoid the bad press.

Scandal also invaded the realms of the investigation. Most historians agree that a lot of the evidence against Frank was distorted or trumped up by the state.

For example, Frank's maid, Lola McKnight, signed an affidavit saying that she overheard a conversation between Frank and his wife. In this discussion, Frank allegedly said that he wanted to shoot himself because he did not know why he had committed a crime such as the one he had committed earlier in the day. But after she was released from jail, Mrs. McKnight repudiated her affidavit and wrote letters to all three Atlanta newspapers saying that she had been forced to sign the statement to get out of jail.

Mrs. McKnight also testified at Frank's trial that she was savagely beaten by cronies of the Solicitor General while in jail.

A prostitute at a "rooming house" told the press that detectives had tried to persuade her to sign an affidavit saying that Frank had called her on the day of the murder asking permission to use one of her rooms to take care of a hurt girl. The prostitute had agreed to testify, but later refused. She was never called at the trial.

Mrs. Mattie Miller testified under oath that the Solicitor General's office had offered her $1000 to testify that she had sexual relations with Frank on several occasions inside his office. She refused to lie.

The statements of a black semi-literate janitor at the factory convicted Frank, and these statements were extremely suspect. Conley was a known drunk, an ex-con, and an infamous liar. He told four different stories about his part in the Frank affair, signed three affidavits and repudiated two of these. At the trial, the defense produced several witnesses who testified of Conley's ill repute. But the jury still believed him.

In his final affidavit, he said that Frank had approached him on the second floor on the day of the murder and confessed the crime to him. He said that his boss asked him to write the murder notes naming Newt Lee as the killer. Conley said he wrote the notes and carried the body to the basement for Frank. He said Frank paid him $200 to keep his mouth shut.

Conley was obviously well coached by the Solicitor General, Hugh Dorsey. He spent countless hours in conference with him before the trial. Dorsey gave him a haircut, a shave, and a new suit of clothes. This made him look more respectable than he really was. Conley was imprisoned in the police jail by Dorsey and his visitors were cautiously screened. No one from the defense was allowed to confer with the prisoner.

The evidence against Conley was actually greater than the evidence against Frank, according to C. Vann Woodward, an uninvolved historian. The Grand Jury wanted to indict the black man rather than Frank, but Conley appealed that decision. After talking to members of the Grand Jury for a few minutes, Dorsey was able to convince them to induct Frank instead.

Why did Hugh Dorsey, the press, and people of Atlanta hate Leo Max Frank? There are several possible explanations. First of all, the south was poor--the people were tenant farmers on exhausted land or millhands in sweatshops. Mary Phagan was a symbol of their cause, a young and innocent virgin. But Frank was a rich, northern Jew, a supervisor of underpaid juvenile labor, typical of the class that had oppressed the poverty stricken southerners for years.

Dorsey made the case a personal battle. Historians say that he was obsessed, possessed and engrossed in the Frank case. He had lost a couple of cases for the state of late, and needed a conviction to remain in the favor of his supervisors. He also knew that he could have any political job in the state if he won. He was right.

Why didn't they lynch the black man, Jim Conley? The evidence pointed to him and he was black. But blacks were lynched every week in the south and Conley was not "worth" the life of Mary Phagan. He was considered subhuman.

It was no big deal to lynch a black man. In the same week that Frank was arrested, three blacks were lynched in Georgia. One was lynched for getting drunk and shooting a gun, another for talking back to a white man, and the third for whistling at a white Sunday School teacher.

Mary Phagan

The trial began on July 28, 1913. Frank had seven lawyers, led by Luther Rosser, Dorsey's brother-in-law, and considered the best lawyer in Atlanta. Dorsey led the prosecution's team of three able lawyers. The presiding magistrate was Judge Leonard S. Roan, 64 and in failing health. He was considered by his peers to be a timid man, but honest and fair.

The trial was a farce. Since the new ozonators, or air-conditioners, in the courtroom did not work, the windows had to be raised. The summer of 1913 was a hot one.

On every single day of the 30-day trial, a massive mob gathered outside. These spectators brought their fried chicken and cold beer and made a party out of the justice system. Crowds as large as 5,000 gathered to cheer for Dorsey and jeer the defense. Frank's lawyers were consistently drowned out by

con't. on p.4

boos. Judge Roan made only feeble attempts to maintain order. He could not prevent the jury from hearing the mob chant, "Hang the Jew or we'll hang you". No jury in their right mind would vote not guilty under such a direct threat of death. No one doubted that the mob would fulfill this promise.

The actual evidence presented in the trial was also the object of a lot of controversy. The defense tried to prove that Conley was a liar and probably the murderer himself. They brought up the fact that Conley had been caught washing blood off his shirt, but no one ever seriously questioned him about it.

A reenactment of the crime showed that it would have taken Conley at least 34 minutes to drag the body down to the basement, confer with Frank, write the murder notes, and accept money from his boss to keep his mouth shut, but both prosecution and defense testimony gave Conley only 14 minutes at the most.

The defense tried to prove that the defendant had been framed and had not been given a fair trial. They proved that fingerprints had been taken by police but had been "lost". They also proved that police had fabricated evidence about the murder notes, Frank's alleged sexual habits and had savagely beaten his maid to get her to testify against him.

Dorsey used underhanded methods to inflame the mob, such as making the claim that Frank was a "pervert" and a "capitalist". Neither claim was ever proven. The defense produced 50 character witnesses and even five alibi witnesses. But Roan himself said, "If Christ and all his angels came to show this man innocent, they would still vote him guilty." They did, on August 25, 1913.

The crowd cheered wildly, drowning out the prosecutor as he polled the jury. For fear of Frank's life, he was not brought to the courtroom when the verdict was rendered.

The trolley cars stopped in their tracks, business shut down and the stores closed while everyone threw the biggest party in the history of the city. It was the biggest celebration since Georgia seceded from the Union before the Civil War. Three times as many phone calls were placed on this day than on any other previous day in the history of Atlanta.

The trial had taken the World War off the front page for the 29 days, not only in Atlanta, but all over the nation. When the results came in, outcries poured in from all over the country, from thousands of groups and people; Georgia stood alone in her wrong. Frank never had a chance, even with the brass of his seven lawyers. Rosser did his best, but was naive enough to believe that he could win. But it would probably be safe to say that no lawyer on earth could have defended Frank under these circumstances probably not even Tom Watson.

Judge Roan said, "I do not know whether Leo Frank is guilty or innocent". But the good Judge still sentenced him to hang.

Governor Busbee has signed a proclamation naming the week of July 11-18 Astronomy Week in Georgia. Along with several state parks, museums and nature centers, Fernbank Science Center is planning special activities to celebrate the week.

One of the approximately 34,000 insulating tiles that covered about 70% of the "Columbia's" surface will be on display at Fernbank Science Center. Without these insulating tiles, the shuttle would have burned on re-entering ing of "Show Boat" starring Van Johnson and John McCook on July 14 - 19 at the Atlanta Civic Center.

"Show Boat", one of the world's greatest and best loved musicals, is by Oscar Hammerstein 2nd based on Edna Ferber's best selling novel. Jerome Kern, America's most successful composer of popular music for a time, wrote the score which includes songs such as "Can Help Loving That Man of Mine", "Will Do I Love", and the stirring show stopper, "Ole Man River".

The Summer Play Season will take place at the Atlanta Civic Center located at Piedmont and Ralph McGill Boulevard. Performances are Tuesday through Saturday at 8:30 pm, Sunday at 7:30 pm, and Saturday and Sunday at 3:00 pm. Tickets are available at all S.E.A.T.S. locations or can be charged by calling 688-STAR.

Computer-controlled machines cut the tiles. Identification numbers on each tile identify the exact location of the tile, and provide the information needed by the computer to produce an identical tile. REMINDERS FOR INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS.

All international students who transferred to Southern Tech and commenced their work this Summer Quarter must have an I-20 given to the student by the Southern Tech office. They must also have an I-538 (green form) signed by the college they are transferring from. These two forms along with the I-94 (visa card) must be taken to or mailed to the Immigration office.

The student should make copies of his/her I-94 for reference in case the forms are lost. If the student fails to do this he/she will be out of status with immigration.

The immigration office does not recognize the transit status. If you are a transit student you are out of status. Regulations state that an international student must always attend college full time even if attending during the summer or he/she will be out of status.

All FI international students are required to have a major medical insurance policy. Insurance is available from Southern Tech at a nominal fee or the student can pick his own company for insurance. All new or transferring students records will be frozen until they come by Room 101 in the Administration Building to have their forms checked and validated. The frozen record will prevent the student from pre-registering, registering or having any information sent from Southern Tech.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS ARE ENCOURAGED TO COME BY THE ADVISORS OFFICE - ROOM 100 - ADMINISTRATION BUILDING ANY-TIME FOR INFORMATION OR ADVISE.

Veterans

ALL VETERANS are reminded that they should have filled out the status form in the vets office that shows their attendance for the summer quarter. Failure to do this will curtail payments.

If a veteran has a change of address he/she should fill out the change of address form for both the college and the VA office. Do this to expedite information from college and checks from the VA office.

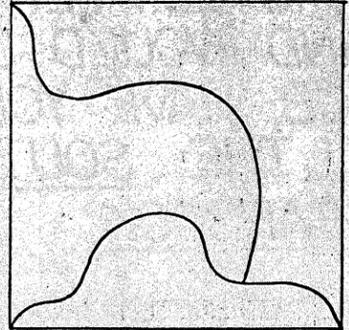

If veterans have questions they are encouraged to come by the VA office, Room 101 or 102 of the Administration Building as soon as possible.

The Southern Tech Baptist Student Union would like to announce its first meeting for Summer Quarter, 1981. The meeting will be held Monday July 20 at 6:55 P.M. Everyone is invited to attend.

Also, the Wieuca Road Baptist Church will be having a college retreat on July 31 and August 1. Anyone interested should contact Don Lott at 953-0248 for further information

SINCE I MET YOU

Since I met you
I've had to THINK
Not only of MYSELF
And of the wounds of past promises
But of YOU!
And of how I never want to hurt
you,
But being such that I am
I will.
And you won't like it.
And I won't like it.
And we'll be back where we started
As if we never met
And I'm afraid.
